

TANTRIC CULT OF SOUTH INDIA

TANTRIC CULT
OF SOUTH INDIA

R. NAGASWAMY

AGAM KALA PRAKASHAN
DELHI

PL

1245

T3

N34

1982

First Published 1982.

© R. Nagaswamy (b. 1930)

Published by : Agam Prasad, M.A., P.G. Diploma in Museology, for AGAM KALA PRAKASHAN 34, Community Centre, Ashok Vihar, Phase I, Delhi-110052, Phone 713395

Production Controller : Bihari Lal Bansal, B.B. ENTERPRISES, 707, Trinagar, Delhi-110035

Printed by : PRINT INDIA, A-38/2 Mayapuri, Phase I, New Delhi-110064

Plates Printed by : RAJ PRESS, R-3, Inderpuri, New Delhi-110012

Dedicated to the memory of my mother
ALAMELU

CONTENTS

Preface	ix
List of Illustrations	xi
I. INTRODUCTION	1
II. TANTRISM IN TAMIL CLASSICAL LITERATURE	3
III. TANTRISM IN TAMIL DEVOTIONAL LITERATURE	39
IV. TANTRISM IN TAMIL SASTRIC WORKS	68
V. TANTRISM IN SANSKRIT WORKS—SASTRIC	97
VI. SILPA TEXTS	132
VII. TANTRISM IN MONUMENTAL ART	142
VIII. SAKTI WORSHIP AS GLEANED FROM EPIGRAPHS	212
Select Bibliography	225
Index	229
Plates

PREFACE

This work formed the subject matter of my Doctoral Thesis, approved by the Poona University. It is my pleasant duty to record my gratitude to scholars, colleagues, and other workers who have contributed immensely towards the completion of this study. I thank Prof. H.D. Sankalia who guided me through this research by patiently going through it and advising me at appropriate places. But for his appreciative guidance and help I would not have been able to achieve what has been possible here. I thank the Vice-Chancellor of the Poona University for permission to publish this work.

I recall with gratitude the encouragement received from late Dr. T.P. Meenakshisundaranar, former Vice-Chancellor of Madurai University, who was mainly responsible for initiating me into this research. I express my profound thanks to Dr. Francois Gros, Director, French Institute of Indology, Pondicherry and Madam Lernhault of the same Institute who very kindly placed at my disposal their entire photographic collections for study and evinced great interest in my pursuit. Nearly half of the illustrations included in this book were kindly supplied by the French Institute. To Shri H. Sarkar, Director, Archaeological Survey of India and other eminent scholars like Shri Saw. Ganesan, Shri M. Arunachalam, Mr. A.S. Jnanasambandam and Shri V. Ganapathi Sthapathi, I express my profound thanks for their interest in this work.

I owe a great debt of gratitude to the Staff of the Tamilnadu State Department of Archaeology, who patiently helped me in my studies. To the Government of Tamilnadu to which I owe everything, I express my profound thanks for very kindly permitting me to pursue the study.

The indefatigable Agam Prasad of Agam Kala Prakashan, deserves my thanks for not only taking up my work for publication but also having got the same printed so beautifully.

Last but not the least I remember with a sense of filial affection to my father who initiated me into Vedic studies. I place this at the feet of my mother who taught me in my younger days the devotional hymns on Devi, which guided me throughout my work. To my elder brother U.R. Narasimhan, who was himself a Vedic scholar and a keen student of Hindu faith, I am thankful for brotherly affection and guidance in this project. Finally, I owe my gratitude to my family members, my wife Parvati and children, who took the burden of even legitimate household duties on themselves and gave me enough leisure to pursue this fascinating aspect of Indian culture.

R. NAGASWAMY

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS

1. A view of the lower rock-cut cave, Thiruchirappalli dedicated to Siva and Vishnu. At the back wall are Ganesa, Subrahmanya, Brahma, Surya and Devi as Durga. That Durga is given equal importance with other deities may be seen from the representations wherein Durga appears at the end.
2. The Mahisha cave, to the north of sea-shore temple, Mamallapuram showing Devi's lion attacking the monstrous Mahisha.
3. The monolithic temple of Durga, now called Draupadiratha, Mamallapuram, 8th cent. A.D.
4. The temple of Durga (Draupadiratha) with lion mount of the Devi shown in front.
5. The female guardians of the Devi (Jaya and Vijaya) shown in Draupadiratha, Mamallapuram.
6. Devi as Paradevata standing on a lotus pedestal (not on Mahisha's head) inside the sanctum of Draupadiratha.
7. A hero offering his own head to the goddess.
8. The attendants of the goddess.
9. Durga shown in a niche at the back of the Draupadiratha, Mamallapuram. In this monolithic temple dedicated to Durga, all the three main niches around the garbhagriha carry the image of Durga. The simple hut-shape of the temple may also be noted.
10. The saga in stone. The great scene of Mahishasuramardini, Mamallapuram.
11. The lion mount of the Devi in the seashore temple complex, Mamallapuram.
12. Devi as Bhavani witnessing the dance of her master-Siva-Pallava fresco, 8th cent. A.D. Panamalai.
13. Candika, the great Goddess, Mamallapuram, Pallava, 8th cent. A.D.

14. Somaskanda in the seashore temple, Mamallapuram, Pallava, 8th cent. A.D.
15. Vina Vadini Devi found on the enclosure wall of the Kailasanatha temple of Kanchipuram. Pallava, 8th cent. A.D. The Syamaladandaka praises the love of music of the Devi as 'Manikka vinam upalalayantim'. The Navaratnamalika states "Vamanke nihita vinam".
16. Deva rshi sanghata stuyamana Atma vaibhava says the Lalita sahasranama. This sculpture found on the enclosure wall of the Kailasanatha shows that the concept was fully developed in the Pallava times in the 7th-8th cent. A.D.
17. Durga in the cloistered cell south of the main shrine of Kailasanatha temple, Kanchi.
18. Mahishasuradamani in cell south of main shrine, Kailasanatha temple, Kanchi.
19. Durga and Mahayogesvari on the north wall of the central shrine, Kailasanatha temple, Kanchipuram.
20. In the centre is Tripurantaka to his left is Tripura to his right Tripura Bhairava; on the north wall of the Kailasanatha temple, Kanchipuram.
21. Bhairava, Kailasanatha temple, Kanchipuram.
22. Saptamatas on the enclosure wall south of the main shrine, Kailasanatha temple, Kanchipuram. Brahmi, Mahesvari, Kaumari, Vaishnavi, Varahi, Indrani, and Camunda are seen in order.
23. Jyeshtha devi on the north wall of the main shrine, Kailasanatha temple, Kanchi.
24. Vakdevi, Sundaravarada Perumal temple, Uttaramerur, Pallava, 8th cent. A.D.
25. Durga in the Devakoshta of the Siva temple, Takkolam of the age of Aparajita Pallava, 9th cent. A.D.
26. Brahmi in the Virattanesvara temple of Thiruttani of the age of Aparajita Pallava, 9th cent. A.D.
27. Mahesvari in the Virattanesvara temple of Thiruttani of the age of Aparajita Pallava, 9th cent. A.D.
28. Kaumari in the Virattanesvara temple of Thiruttani of the age of Aparajita Pallava, 9th cent. A.D.
29. Vaishnavi in the Virattanesvara temple of Thiruttani of the age of Aparajita Pallava, 9th cent. A.D.
30. Varahi in the Virattanesvara temple of Thiruttani of the age of Aparajita Pallava, 9th cent. A.D.
31. Indrani in the Virattanesvara temple of Thiruttani of the age of Aparajita Pallava, 9th cent. A.D.
32. Camunda in the Virattanesvara temple of Thiruttani of the age of Aparajita Pallava, 9th cent. A.D.

33. Durga in Mangadu village near Madras, Pallava, 8th cent. A.D.
34. Eight-armed Durga in the Ranganatha temple, Thiruvarangam.
35. Durga, four-armed, standing on a lotus by the side of her mount deer, Pallava, 9th cent. A.D.
36. Eight-armed Durga standing on the head of a Mahisha, Parangiyur, 9th cent. A.D.
37. A yogini found near eight-armed Durga (See Pl. 36) at Parangiyur.
38. Durga, Vallam, Pallava, 8th cent. A.D.
39. Durga, Periyamarai Tiruchchi district, Pallava, 8th cent. A.D.
40. Durga on the buffaloe head. Standing by the side of her is her mount deer, now in the Madras Museum, 9th cent. A.D.
41. A paper impression of an eight-armed Durga standing with an inscription in 8th cent. A.D. Vatteluttu characters giving the name of the Goddess as Baghavati, Kurucculi on Tirthamalai, Dharmapuri district.
42. Another paper impression of Durga with an inscription in Tamil of 11th cent. A.D.
43. Durga and Vishnu in an excavated cave at Kunnakkudi, Pandya, 8th cent. A.D.
44. Siva dancing on Muyalaka and Parvati standing by the side witnessing the dance. A part of the panel showing Saptamatas dancing is blocked by later walling, Thirupparakunram, Pandya, 8th cent. A.D.
45. The Goddess Nisumbasudani, set up at Thanjavur by Vijayalaya Chola, 9th cent. A.D.
46. Kali set up at Kilaiyur by a Paluvettarayar chieftain, Early Chola, 9th cent. A.D.
47. Goddess Kali of imposing beauty and elegance, Thiruvakkarai, of the age of Vijayalaya Chola, 9th cent. A.D.
48. A bronze image of Goddess Kali, Kilaiyur, Thanjavur district, of the age Vijayalaya Chola, 9th cent. A.D.
49. Durga, stone, Kandiyur, Thanjavur District, 9th cent. A.D.
50. Durga, stone, Thyagaraja temple, Thiruvarur, Early Chola, 9th cent. A.D.
51. Durga, stone, Thyagaraja temple, Thanjavur, Early Chola, 10th cent. A.D.
52. Durga, stone, Siva temple, Punjai, Chola, 10th cent. A.D.
53. Durga, stone, Amalisvaram temple, Thiruchi district, Chola, 10th cent. A.D.
54. Tripurasundari Durga, stone in the East Gopura, Chidambaram, Later Chola, 12th cent. A.D.
55. Bhadrakali in the West Gopura, Chidambaram, Later Chola, 12th cent. A.D.
56. Sarasvati in the Gopura, Chidambaram, Later Chola, 12th cent. A.D.
57. Goddess Ganga in the East Gopura, Chidambaram, Later Chola, 12th cent. A.D.

58. Yamuna, stone, in the eastern gopura, Chidambaram, Later Chola, 12th cent. A.D.
59. Durga, Bronze, Chola, 11th cent. A.D. Tanjore Art Gallery.
60. Durga, Bronze, Dharmapuram mutt collection, Chola, 11th-12th cent. A.D.
61. Dancing girl carrying damaru and sula, found on the base of the prakara of Sivakami shrine, Chidambaram, Later Chola, 12th cent. A.D.
- 62-63. Dancers, Chidambaram temple, Later Chola, 12th cent. A.D.
64. Tillaikkali temple, built by Kopperunjing, 13th cent. A.D.
65. Tillaivanamudaiya Paramesvari, Bronze, Chola, 11th cent. A.D., Tillaikkali temple, Chidambaram.
66. Amman shrine built in the 13th cent., A.D., Darasuram.
67. Icea Sakti in the devakostha of the Amman shrine, Darasuram, 13th cent. A.D.
68. Jnana Sakti in the devakostha of the Amman shrine, Darasuram.
69. The dvarapalikas, Amman shrine.
70. Jaya and Vijaya in Darasuram.
71. Ashtamata group, Thiruvaiyaru, Thanjavur District.
72. Bhairava from Kalinga. Now in Chengamedu, Gangai Konda Cholapuram.
73. Bhairava from Kalinga, Gangai Konda Cholapuram.
74. Bhairavi, Kalinga, now in Gangai Konda Cholapuram.
75. Durga, Nolamba, now in Gangai Konda Cholapuram.
76. Durga, Nolamba, now in the Siva temple at Thiruvadigai.
77. Devi enshrined in the sanctum holding akshamala and a flower in the upper arm.
78. Devi in the sanctum, holding flowers in both the arms.
79. Devi enshrined in the Amman temple, Kalantai near Pollachi, Later Chola, 13th cent. A.D.
80. Devi doing tapas, often called Tapas Kamakshi, stone, Later Chola, 12th cent. A.D.
81. Tapas-Kamakshi, Bronze, Mangadu temple, 18th cent. A.D.
82. A modern painting of Kanya Kumari, the presiding deity of Kanya Kumari.
83. Somaskanda, Bronze, Pallava, Thiruvalangadu, 8th cent. A.D.
84. Siva as Gananatha heading Saptamatas, Thanjavur, Early Chola, 9th cent. A.D.
85. Guhambika, Bronze, Pallavanesvaram, 9th cent. A.D.
86. Tripuravijaya and Tripurasundari, Bronze, Konerirajapuram, Chola, 10th cent. A.D.

87. Tripurasundari, Bronze, Siva temple, Kodumudi, Kongunadu, 10th cent. A.D.
88. Urdhava Tandava Siva, Bronze, Thiruvallangadu, Chola, 10th cent. A.D.
89. Kali, Bronze, Chola, 11th cent. A.D. Thiruvallangadu.
90. Kali, Bronze, Kolamali Amman temple, Mylapore, Chola, Early 10th cent. A.D.
91. Kali standing with folded arms Melakkadambur, Later Chola, 10th cent. A.D.
92. Kali, stone, Madurai Nayak, 17th cent. A.D.
93. Kali, ivory, Srirangam Museum, Madurai Nayak, 17th cent. A.D.
94. Kali, stone, Chola, Tiruvorriyur, 11th cent. A.D.
95. Kali, Bronze gilded with gold from Mysore region.
96. Kali, Bronze, 17th cent. A.D.
97. Kali, Bronze, 17th cent. A.D.
98. Parasakti, stone, in the Darasuram temple, Later Chola, 12th cent. A.D.
99. Maha Maya sakti, stone, Siva temple, Darasuram, Later Chola, 12th cent. A.D.
100. An attendant, Darasuram, Later Chola, 12th cent. A.D.
101. Sati stone, from Tenneri, depicting Brahma, Sivalinga, Uma, Subramanya, Narasimha, Srivatsa, the two arms, and two heros flanked by females.
102. Sati Panel stone, Munnur, Brahma, Linga, Parvati, Narasimha.

INTRODUCTION

The subject of the present study is the Tāntric cult in Tamil Nadu in Pallava and later times. The term, Tāntric, in a general sense may be said to represent the cult of image worship and its associated philosophic thought. In the 7th century in the Devaram hymns of the Tamil country, Śiva is praised as the embodiment of Mantra and Tantra; Mantra standing for vedic hymns and Tantra for image worship. But the word has come to stay now for the Śakti cult and its associated philosophy. I have used the term Tantra in the sense of Śakta or Devi cult. Sir Jhon Woodroffe and, following him, many other eminent scholars have enquired into the true nature of the Tāntric cult specially of northern India and have brought out many scholarly publications. But in all these texts, southern India, particularly the Tamil country, has not received the attention it deserves; the reason being the vast body of Tamil literature has not yet been translated and made available to scholars. Hence we have tried to analyse as many Tamil texts as are necessary in this study.

Though Tamil literature is available from the beginning of the Christian era, it is only with the advent of the Pallavas that monumental art and architecture have survived. So I have taken the Pallava and later periods as the main periods of the enquiry. The Pallavas appear in the history of the Tamil country from the end of the 3rd century A.D. and survive till the end of the 9th century A.D., but their art and architecture are extant only from the 7th century A.D.

The Śakta cult culminates in the 12-13th century A.D. After the 16-17th century the cult concepts exhausted themselves and what we get later is only a repetition of the same ideas and representations. So I have ended my enquiries with the end of the 16th century A.D.

I have not included Buddhist or Jain cults. I have also not included the Śakti cult as manifested in the Vaishnava faith. The present study is, therefore, confined to various manifestations of the Devi and their intimate connection with the Śākta and Śaiva doctrines.

During the early phase of my study I, recognised that a correlated study of classical, sāstraic, devotional, āgamic and śilpa literature, together with monumental relics, was essential to get a clear picture of the cult. I have, therefore, concentrated on both Tamil and Sanskrit work that were written in the Tamil country. The works taken up for study are not confined to the Pallava and later periods, but include the earlier texts so that the development of the cult could be clearly grasped.

Tamil literature is very vast, and it is not possible to exhaust it all in such a study as this. Some excellent works like Abhirāmi andāti etc., were composed in the 18th and later centuries. But they need a separate dissertation. A vast body of folk songs bearing directly on the Śākta cult exists, but its date is not known and it is not possible to include it in the present study for the Śākta cult is a dominant faith even to this day and needs a cultural anthropological approach to complete the story.

I have also not included in this study some devotional hymns on Devi, popularly ascribed to Āchārya Sankara, the exponent of the Advaita doctrine. Though they are exceptionally good poems on Devi, I concur with many eminent scholars that the greatest exponent of Advaita doctrine could not have been the author of these verses. There is also a tradition that Sankarācharya converted a number of ugradevatas into saumya deities. Similar stories are also current on the conversion of many Vaikhānasa temples into Pāñcharātra temples by Rāmānuja. These stories have no historicity. The epigraphs of the period show no such movements at all. The stories associating Sankara with temples seem to be post-16th century. So I have not analysed such works as Soundaryalahari and various ambāstutis.

However, in the history of the Tamil Śākta cult, the temples of Kāmākshi at Kanchi, Minākshi at Madurai and Kanyakumari occupy very important positions. So I have discussed them separately at some length.

The monumental art and inscriptions have been analysed. Large number of illustrations have been included to illustrate the various aspects of the Devi cult.

II

TANTRISM IN TAMIL CLASSICAL LITERATURE

SANGAM WORKS

The body of literature collected into two groups called Pattu Pāṭṭu (ten songs) and Ettutthogai (eight anthologies) is called Sangam works. They are excellent products of the Tamil genius and are more secular than later day compositions. They are collections of poems of various poets who are said to have adorned 'the assembly of poets' called the Sangam. They are generally referred to as Sangam works; the earliest records of Tamil thought reflecting the Tamil way of life and culture.

Regarding the date of the Sangam age, differences of opinion exist among scholars; some would take them to earlier than the sixth century B.C. while others place between the 6th to 8th century A.D. Both views are based on personal likings rather than on historical reasoning. A conservative view,¹ now being accepted, would place these poems around the 1st century B.C. to A.D. 150. I will not go into details of the reasoning for this date.

The earliest inscriptions assignable to the pre-Christian era refer to the Pandya rulers mentioned in these Tamil works.² Another inscription coming from Pugalur assignable to the beginning of the Christian era refers to three generations of Chera rulers who are mentioned in Sangam literature.³ The Sangam works frequently refer to the Yavanas who have been identified rightly with the Romans. Archaeological excavations at Arikamedu, Karur, Kanchi and other places have confirmed this connection with the Roman world.⁴

1. Nilakanta Sastri, K.A., A history of South India, Madras, 1977, P. 116.

2. Mahadevan, I., Corpus of the Tamil Brahmi Inscriptions in 'Seminar on Inscriptions', Ed. R. Nagaswamy, Madras, 1968, Pp. 65-66.

3. Ibid., Pp. 65-66.

4. Mortimer Wheeler, Sir, Ancient India, No. 2.

Sangam works refer to various aspects of Sakti, particularly in her Durgā and Kālī manifestations. Tirumurugārpuṇṇai,¹ the first of the ten songs, is in praise of Muruga-Subrahmanya. Subrahmanya is extolled as the son of Haimavatī (malaimagaḷ mahan). He is also called the son of goddess Durgā, the giver of victory and son of the goddess Kālī.

“மலைமகள் மகனே மாற்றோர் கூற்றே
வெற்றிவேல் போர்க் கொற்றவை சிறுவ
இழையணி சிறப்பில் பழையோன் குழனி”

(வரிகள் : 57, 58, 59)

Here three aspects of Sakti are alluded to. As Koṇṇavai (Durgā) she is the giver of victory, and Paḷaiyōḷ i.e., the most ancient goddess Kālī. The learned commentator, Naccinārkiniyār gives the meaning of Koṇṇavai as Vana Durgā and Paḷaiyōḷ as Kāḍukāḷ (Kālī). He also gives the derivation of the word Kāḍukāḷ as a corrupt form of Kāḍukiḷāḷ i.e., the presiding deity of the forest. In later literature and inscriptions Kālī is often called Kāḍukkāḷ.

*Siruppānarruppaḍai*² is another song of the anthology. Here the spear of a chieftain is praised as a lofty one adorned by Koṇṇavai (Durgā). That Durgā resides in weapons, particularly the spear, is a well-known concept reflected in later literature as well.

“அழல் திகழ்ந்து இமைக்கும் அஞ்சவரு நெடுவேல் கழல் கொடி தடக்கைக் காரியும்”

(வரிகள் : 45)

In this alaḷ stands for the wrath of Koṇṇavai Durgā. Nedunalvāḍai, another work of the same group, seems to allude to worship of Durgā by love-lorn women. Kuruntogai, a collection of four hundred short verses, is included in the eight anthologies. It refers to the vow taken by women whose husbands are separated from them, during expeditions etc. They remove their ornaments, and wear ritual threads around their wrist to propitiate goddess Durgā, so that their husbands would return safely and speedily.

This vow to get back their husbands speedily and safely is also referred to in Kuruntogai.³ It refers to a desperate girl, who refuses to wear the ritual thread around her wrist and worship Durgā, as her husband has left her unmindful of her love.

“விடர்முனை அடுக்கத்து விறல்கெழு சூலிக்கு
கடனும் பூனும், கைநூல் யாவாம்”

(பாடல் : 218—1-2)

1. Pattu Paṭṭu, Ed. U.V. Swaminatha Iyer, Madras, 1974, Pp. 1-80.

2. Ibid., P. 137.

3. Kuruntogai, Ed. U.V. Swaminatha Iyer, Madras, 1962, P. 416.

It is interesting to see that Durgā is said to reside in natural caverns and then she was called Sūli. That this was the case, is proved by two striking examples illustrated in this work. One comes from panamalai. An excellent image of Durgā installed by the Pallava ruler Rājasimha, in the 8th century A.D., in a beautiful natural cavern at the foot of the hill. The other illustration comes from Tirtamalai in Dharmanpuri district. It is an inscribed image of Durgā of the 8th century A.D. It is on the hill called Tirtamalai; what is striking is that the Vattelettu inscription on the slab calls it Sūli (Bhagavati Kuruccūli).

The *Ahanānūru*¹ collection of the eight anthologies also refers to the goddess as the presiding deity of the forest. Kānamar Selvi bestowed a white horse on a poet, an allusion which is not clear. Probably it refers to the beneficent aspect of Kālī.

The Padirruppattu collection also seems to allude to the Goddess residing in the Vāhai tree (66).²

The Perumbānārruppaḍai,³

“வெண்கிறை பரப்பில் கடுஞ்சூல் கொன்ற
பைம்பூன் சேய் பவந்த
மாமேட்டுத் துணங்கையம் செல்வி”

(வரிகள் : 457-59)

refers to Moṭi, the mother of Subrahmanya, the destroyer of Sūrapadman. She is said to be the most beautiful Goddess, surrounded by dancing imps.

Kalittokai,⁴ another collection of poems included in the eight anthologies refers to the Goddess as the presiding deity of the cemetery (perungāḍu). Perungāṭṭukorri and she is probably identical with Kālī.

In the Porunarārruppaḍai,⁵ the minstrels are exhorted by the poets to offer worship and music, to please the goddess of the forest, Kālī, which shows the importance attached to the temple, by the people.

“களிறு வழங்கதர்க் கானத்தல்கி
இகியில் மரத்த வெவ்வந் தாங்கி
வலைவலந்தன்ன மென்னிழன் மருங்கில்
காடுறை கடவுட் கடன் கழிப்பிய பின்”

(வரிகள் : 49-53)

It was almost considered a kaḍan; essential rite or duty.

From the above it may be seen that the benign and terrific aspects of the Goddess were well known in the Sangam period. Her manifestations as Umā, Durgā and Kālī were known. She was propitiated by all sections of society. Women used to take

1. Ahanānūru, Ed. Murray S. Rajam, Madras, 1958, P. 189.

2. Padirru Pattu, Ed. U.V. Swaminatha Iyer, Madras, 1957, Pp. 172-174.

3. Pattu Pāṭṭu, Ibid., p. 207.

4. Kalittokai, Ed. Murray S. Rajam, Madras, 1957, P. 80.

5. Pattu Pāṭṭu, Ibid., P. 86.

vows and worship her. Wandering minstrels adored her with music. She associated with cemetery and mountains. In short, all her manifestations in later literature and art, had already their roots in the Tamil country at the beginning of the Christian era.

TOLKĀPPIYAM

*Tolkāppiyam*¹ the earliest extant Tamil grammar, refers to a certain poetic composition called Koṟṟavai nilai.² The word Koṟṟavai means Durgā. The reference in this work relates to the worship of goddess Durgā by soldiers when they embark on a cattle lifting expedition or on a cattle rescuing operation. In poetic parlance Koṟṟavai nilai is placed after *Tuḍi nilai*³ i.e., announcing the expedition by beat of drum. When Durgā is adored, sacrifice is offered to her, praying victory. From citations it is seen that this worship is offered not only at the time of cattle lifting or rescuing expeditions but also when the king invades another country or starts on a defensive operation called Vanji tṇai.

The citation for this sūtra, quoted by the commentator Naccinārkiniyār shows three types of sacrificial offerings : a buffalo sacrifice; a human sacrifice; and a hero making a cut on his body and offering blood.⁴

Tolkāppiyam also refers to Veriyāttu,⁵ a form of wild dance in honour of Vēlōṇ (Murugan). Thus the worship of Koṟṟavai and Murugan seems to have been performed side by side during war expeditions.

The date of Tolkāppiyam has been much debated but a conservative estimate would place it in the 1st or 2nd century A.D. This shows that in the early centuries of the Christian era Durgā was remembered for her association with battles and wars and, therefore, was invoked in her terrific aspect and associated with bloody sacrifices.

Puṟapporuḷ Venbāmālai.⁶ a medieval work on poetics, follows Tolkāppiyam and refers to *Koṟṟavai nilai*⁷ which is said to come after Tuḍi nilai. According to this work, Koṟṟavai nilai refers to singing the grace of the Devi, the bearer of ever shining and victorious weapons. A verse exemplifying the Koṟṟavai nilai narrates that, "The Devi, seated on a prancing stag, carrying a parrot and with the yāḷi standard, followed by the battalion of goblins, will go in front of the soldiers who are on a cattle lifting expedition". This verse is interesting : the Devi has the stag as her mount. She keeps a parrot in one of her arms. The figure of yāḷi is on her standard. She is followed by

1. Tolkāppiyam, Murray S. Rajam Publication 1960; Also S. Bhavanandam Pillai edition, Madras, 1916.

2. Ibid., Sūtra 59, P. 164.

3. Ibid., Sūtra 59.

4. Ibid., Porulathukāram with Naccinarkiniyar's commentary, P. 165.

5. Ibid., Sūtra 60.

6. Puṟapporuḷ Venbāmālai text and commentary, U.V. Swaminatha Iyer (ed.), Madras, 1963.

7. Ibid., 40, P. 21.

her army of goblins. It was believed that she would go in front of the soldiers giving them victory.

In describing another poetic expression, Vanji, Koravainilai is again mentioned. In this case, the expedition is by the king for the conquest of territories. Soldiers offer prayer and sacrifice to Koravai praying for victory to their king. The example cited is of interest. Sesame oil, popcorn, boiled avarai and tuvarai seeds, blood, intestines and flesh are said to be carried in a skull (or a vessel) by Durgā who goes in front of the soldiers bestowing victory on the ruler. Obviously this refers to the offerings made by the soldiers.

SILAPPADHIKĀRAM

The *Silappadhikāram*¹ is an epic par excellence in Tamil composed by Ilango, a Chēra prince. It is an ocean of information on the social and religious conditions of the times. Its value is singularly high for the fact that it portrays various religious sects in their true spirit, without bias towards unlike Manimekhalai, the other epic. We are, therefore, in a position to evaluate each sect in its true perspective.

The Sākta cult is fully represented in this work in all its aspects. There are four major themes, represented in this text : the iconography of Sakti, the Nagaradēvata concept, Sākta philosophy and the peculiar customs among the hill and forest tribes in adoration of Sakti.

Iconography

The Dēvi wears Jaṭāmakuta, in which are the crescent moon and a serpent. She wears elephant skin as a garment over which tiger's skin is worn as a girdle (Mēkalai). She has the third eye on her forehead. Her smile with pearl-like teeth with coral like lips is enchanting. Her throat is darkened by the ālakāla poison that she swallowed (as Śiva). A fierce serpent is worn as the breast-band. She wears śilambu and kaḷal on her feet, and stands on the head of the asura who appeared with human and buffalo bodies.² She has Śiva as a part of her body, and in her arms holds Śankha and Chakra, Śūla and the sword. She is seated on a stag with twisted horns. She also stands on a terrific male lion.³

All these iconographic details show that by the time of Silappadhikāram, the concept of Durgā with all her attributes was fully evolved. In the earliest representations of Durgā in Tamil country, at Māmallapuram and Kanchipuram, she is shown with all these attributes.

The following names⁴ occur for Durgā in this work : Koravai, Amari, Kumari, Gauri, Samari, Aiyai, (Ārya) Sūli, Nili, Sankari, Antari,⁵ Kalaiyamar Selvi (one who has

1. Silappadhikāram, text and commentaries, U.V. Swaminatha Iyer (Ed.), 7th ed. Madras, 1960; also The Silappadhikāram, Translated with an introduction and notes by V.R. Ramachandra Dikshitar, Madras, 1939.

2. Ibid., 12-54 to 66.

3. Ibid., 12-Verse 8, 9, 10.

4. Ibid., 12-lines 66-68.

5. Ibid., P. 319.

a deer as her vehicle), Vinnōr Pāvai¹ (The Dēvi of the gods) here is perhaps an allusion to the emanation of the Devi out of the tejas of all the gods as mentioned in Devī Māhātmya, Vāna Nāḍi² is another term showing her love of forests. She is also the presiding deity of the desert region.

Nagaradēvata

The deification of a city as a goddess is an ancient concept which should have spread to all parts of the country with urbanisation. From the very beginning, the presiding deities of villages, cities and rivers were conceived as female principles in India. The grāmadēvatas and the nagaradēvatas were always identified with Durgā, a wellknown example being the Pushkalāvati Dēvata.

The nagaradēvata concept is also fully developed in Silappadikāram and her description clearly establishes that she is none other than Durgā. She is described as Madurāpati Dēvata,³ the deification of the city of Madurai, in canto 23.

Madurāpati's head is decorated with matted locks and a crescent moon. Her eyes are like the Kuvalai flowers. She wears a captivating smile and her red-lipped mouth shows protruding teeth at the ends. Her left half of the body is dark-blue in colour while the right is golden. She carries a lotus in her left arm and a sword in her right arm. In her right leg is Kaḷai and in the left Silambu. She is the family deity of the Pāṇḍyas.

From the above description it is evident that the Nagaradevata of the city of Madura is Durgā, combining in herself the Sakti and Siva aspects almost as found in the Ardhanari images.

In another verse of the same work, the Madurāpati Devatā is said to combine in herself the valour of Mahālakshmi, Mahāsaraswati and Mahādurga. (22-Venba).

மாமகளும் நாமகளும் மாமயிடற் செற்றுக்ந்த
கோமகளும் தாம் படைத்த கொற்றத்தாள் நாம
முதிராமுலை குறைத்தாள் முன்னரே வந்தாள்
மதுராபதி என்னும் மாதா.⁴

V.R.R. Dikshitar's translation of this verse,⁵ 'Kannaki's signal victory over the Madura king was tantamount to all the victories of the three goddesses put together' does not seem to be correct. The valour of the three goddesses are expressed as attributes of goddess Madurāpati and not as a comparison with Kannaki's valour.

1. Silappadhikāram, op. cit., P. 309.

2. Ibid., P. 297.

3. Ibid., P. 497.

4. Ibid., P. 496.

5. V.R.R. Dikshitar's, op.cit., p. 262.

The combination of the Durga-Lakshmi-Saraswati concept as mentioned in the Devi Māhātmya of the Mārkaṇḍeya purāṇa is reflected in this verse. It is worth noting that the concept has taken deep root in Tamil Nadu as early as the age of Silappadikāram.

Another concept in association with the Nagaradevatā representation is also worthy of mention. It was the duty of the presiding deity of the city to ward off wrongs, or to explain to those affected the cause of their suffering.

The occasion in which Madurāpati appears in this epic is interesting. When Kannaki lost her husband for no fault of theirs, goddess Madurāpati appeared before her and explained to her that Kovalan died as a result of his past action in a previous birth. In the Manimekhalai, the Goddess Champāpati, the presiding deity of the city, appeared before lady Gautami and consoled her for the loss of her son. From these, it is seen that people in olden days had full faith in the presiding deity of the cities or villages and that she would protect the dharma of the dwellers.

Tribal Custom :

A very interesting chapter of the Silappadikāram relates to the cult of Sakti as Durgā, prevalent among the hill and forest tribes. The hill and forest tribes are called by varying names as Kāḍavar (foresters), Vettuvar (hunters), Eyinars, Maravar, Kunravar (hill people) etc. These words are used as synonyms in early Tamil literature, but in a later period, this probably came also to refer to sub-castes among them. They were purely food gathering tribes, whose main occupation was hunting, highway robbery and cattle lifting.

A full chapter of Silappadikāram deals with the worship of goddess Durgā by these hunter-tribes and the chapter itself is titled Vettuvavari,¹ i.e. the hunters song. The entire scene is said to take place in the temple of Aiyai (Āryā).

A lady born of a family of hunters was possessed with divinity and with hair standing on end and her hands raised aloft moved from one place to another, dancing with appropriate gestures. In so dancing she pointed out that their yards are lying empty and the towns of their enemies were prospering with cattle herd because the Eyinars have become subdued and meek and no more resorted to highway robbery but lived like people observing dharma (settled citizens). Unless they observed what was due to their Goddess, riding on deer (Durgā), the Devi would not give them victory. If they wanted drinking toddy and a life of merriment they must render their dues to their Goddess.

When the Sālinī exhorted the Eyinars with these words, they chose a virgin from their family and dressed her like Durgā. Her short hair was dressed in the form of jaṭā (like that of Durgā), and ornamented with a small silver snake and a crescent-like semi circular tooth from a wild hog which had destroyed tender plants in well-guarded fields. Her tāli (mangalasūtra) was a necklace made of white teeth plucked from a strong limbed tiger and her girdle was a clean tiger's skin resplendent with spots and stripes on its surface. The bow in her hand was of heart wood. She was riding a stag, with twisted horns. The Eyinar ladies who feted her with offerings of dolls, parrot, wild fowl of soft feathers, blue peacocks, balls and Kalanju, followed her carrying paint, powder, cool fragrant paste, boiled grain, sweet gingili seeds, rice with meat, flowers, frankincense and fragrant scent when she was taken before the shrine of Anangu who accepts the sacrificial offerings in return for victory. This was accompanied by the beating of the drum, used during highway robberies and the blowing of trumpet generally heard when looting, the horn and the pipe and the ringing of loud bell simultaneously.

1. V.R.R. Dikshitar, Ibid., P. 180-189.

From the above description it is seen, when the virgin of their family was dressed like a Durgā, she was seated on a stag and taken in procession to the temple of Durgā to the accompaniment of music and beating of drums connected with the profession of the Eyinars, namely highway robbery and looting.

Then the people around, praise the girl dressed in Durgā's attire and also the clan from which she has come. Then they dance extolling the greatness of Durgā. The Eyinars who had to her vow offer the supreme sacrifice to the goddess by cutting off their head and offering the blood coming out of their severed neck. This is called Avippali (Havis bali). It is also called by some Kuruthippali (blood sacrifice). The Eyinars who offer their head in such a way say that these were their dues to the goddess. The next stage is requesting the Devi to partake this offering which is called Balikkoḍai (Bali dāna). At the end, all of them pray that the ruler of their country should prosper. After these ceremonies are over the girl in Durgā's attire divests herself of the Durgā form.

The above, somewhat elaborate description of Durgā worship by the tribals is not only unique but also valuable for its wealth of information. Before examining the impact of this cult at even such tribal levels, we will notice the salient features of this mode of worship.

A virgin of the clan is selected, and the goddess is invoked on her. The basis of this is that the gods and pitrs, manifest through human beings, are worshipped and adored as the very god or pitṛ as the case may be, for the duration of the period. In medieval inscriptions we find that Brahmins are fed in temples when the naivedya food was offered to the god, the idea being that the god partakes the food in human form. Though this custom has withered away in temple rituals, it is still strongly held in Śrāddha ceremonies, when offerings are made to the dead. The hunters seemed to have had the same belief and invoked the goddess in human beings.

The second point worthy of mention is that the selection of the person expected to personify the deity is dependent on the nature of the god. Since Brahmins were considered gods on earth, they represented god in temple rituals. But in the case of the Devi the person in whom she would manifest was a virgin, since she herself is conceived of as a Kumari. In the Śākta cult, the worship of virgins is a well-known formula, and called Kanyāpūja. It is, therefore, interesting to note that the kanyāpūja concept was prevalent among the hill and forest-dwellers even at the time of Silappadikāram. This shows the extent to which Śākta cult had permeated even the remotest sections of society in Tamil Nadu at such an early period.

Also worthy of mention in this context are the terms avippali and palikkoḍai (havisbali and balidāna) with reference to the offering of the head and invoking the deity to partake the offering. According to Śākta canons, offerings to Sakti are called Yagna. That which is offered as the sacrificial altar is havis. The terms, havis and bali, are intimately associated with vedic yagnas. As the offering (of head or blood) to the goddess was considered a havis and bali in Śākta cult, the relevant portion is captioned havis bali or bali dāna.

Human sacrifice in which the person severed his own head and offered it to goddess Śakti was a popular belief and is reflected in later sculptures and inscriptions.

The Śākta Philosophy :

Among early literature Silappadikāram is the work where Śākta philosophy is reflected in its entire form. The work clearly portrays the goddess as the Supreme deity, adored by all the gods, including the Trinity-Brahma, Vishnu and Śiva.

The goddess standing on a buffalo-headed demon is adored by all the devas. She is the veda of the vedas, the very embodiment of wisdom, (Jñānak-Koḷundu i.e. the cream of knowledge; lit the sprout of knowledge 12-8).¹

This goddess who is seated on a stag with a sword in hand is enshrined in the heart of Brahma, Vishnu and Śiva like a shining light with ever spreading rays (12-9). Here we find the Śākta tattvas expressed in their highest esoteric sense (namely). She is the greatest of the gods, the ultimate reality adored by Brahma, Vishnu and Śiva.

Even Śiva is said to adore Her, which bespeaks to Her Supreme position, the highest plane of philosophic concept. Hers is pure Jñāna adored even by the vedas, which is akin to the advaitic doctrine of Brahma Jñāna. All ritual treatises like the āgamas have two main sections. The kriyāpāda, is the ritual section and the Jñānapāda the philosophic. They conclude that by various sacrificial rites one attains Supreme jñāna, which is bliss. Though sacrificial rites in this case consist of gruesome offering of head, the result and praise end in Jñāna.

The three stanzas which extol Śakti (12-8, 9 & 10) are called munnilai paraval i.e. direct appeal to goddess (the stotras), which again emphasises this aspect. Incidentally these verses may be considered one of the earliest and finest stotra works in Tamil literature.

1. Swaminatha Iyer, op. cit., P. 316.

Other concepts are reflected in this chapter. She is the Supreme Śakti who has Śiva as her right half, Kannuḍal Bhāgam Āḷuḍaiyāl.¹ In the Ardhanārī concept also the two forms of Śiva and Śakti are shown united; yet the composite figure is said to stand for Śiva and is called Ardhanārī Śiva or Ardhanārī Deva. But, in this instance the composite figure is Devi to whom Śiva appears as an aṅga, a part of her. This is intended to emphasise the Supreme position of the goddess.

There is another concept of interest.² "The Devas are dead though they have drunk the nectar, but you are ever living bestowing grace though you have swallowed poison untouched by any". Here is a veiled reference to the fact that among all gods the Devi alone is capable of bestowing grace. In the above references it may be seen that all the exploits of Śiva, like the swallowing of poison, are ascribed to the Devi. So also the exploits of Vishnu as Krishna, like the destruction of the Marudu tree, and of Sakaṭāsura are ascribed to the Devi.

That the Devi combined in herself Śaivite and Vaishnavite traditions is often mentioned in this text. The Devi is said to be the sister of Vishnu.³ She is said to wear both the konṇai and Tulasi garland⁴ (Tulasi standing for the Vishṇu aspect).

The chapter on the demand for justice, Valakkurai-Kāḍai, distinguishes Durgā from Kālī. Kannaki appears at the Royal Gate to demand justice for the murder of her husband. The gatekeeper informs the ruler of the arrival of Kannaki whom he describes as the lady with a terrific countenance. In this context, the gatekeeper says that she is neither Durgā nor Kālī but more than that.⁵

The description of Durgā and Kālī here is worth mentioning. Durgā is the goddess of victory, holding in her hand the victorious spear and standing upon the nape of the buffalo from whose fresh wound unceasing blood flows. Kālī is younger than the six mothers (the youngest of the Saptamātās) and as Bhadra Kālī she witnessed the dance of Śiva. She tore open the heart of Dārukāsura. She is fond of the forest which is the residence of ghosts and goblins. It is necessary to discuss some aspects of Kālī as portrayed here. It is here for the first time that we come across a clear distinction between Durgā and Kālī. Durgā is the Devi who destroyed Mahishāsura. Kālī's manifestation is different in many aspects. In later literature she is always described as Kāḍukal (Kāḍu kiḷā! i.e. the goddess, of the forest). As the goddess who witnessed the dance of Śiva, she is Bhadra Kālī and that is how she is portrayed in sculpture. That she killed Dārukāsura is also mentioned in this text. "Silappadikāram" is influenced by Kerala traditions where the story of Dārukāsura is very popular. It is evidently the legend that arose from Śiva's enticing movement in Darukāvana and the subjugation of

1. Swaminatha Iyer, Ibid., P. 315.

2. Ibid., P. 318.

3. Ibid., P. 314.

4. Ibid., P. 316.

5. Ibid., P. 478 lines 34 to 40.

the sages. It is of interest to mention that the destruction of Darukasura by Kali is not mentioned so often in other literature which shows its Keralaite impact.

Some customs as mentioned in this text are also worth recording. A lady who lost her husband broke her bangles in the temple of Koravai. When Kannaki lost her husband, she broke her bangles at the entrance to the temple of Koravai¹ (23-181). The efficacy of Durgāmantra in exposing frauds was also fully believed. When Kovalan was on his way to Madurai with Kannaki, a certain forest demi-goddess, falling in love with him, assumed the form of a servant of his beloved Mādhavi and enticed him. Kovalan, angered at this recited the Durgāmantra, called Pāykalaippāvai mantram (11-197-198).² (Paykalai Pāvai is Durgā). When this mantra was uttered, the demi-goddess could not hide her identity, and appeared before him pleading forgiveness.

It has been mentioned earlier, that Durgā was adored both as a terrific as also a benign deity. It was believed that, if proper offerings were made to the goddess, she will go in front of the bows of the Eiyinars, with the Yāli standard, to bestow victory on them when they go on a cattle lifting³ expedition.

There were wandering minstrels singing the exploits of Goddess Durgā. They were called *Antari kolam pādum Pānar*⁴ and the songs themselves were called Pāykalaippāvai Pādarpani.

Not only the musicians but also the dancers were greatly fascinated by the various themes connected with the exploits of Durgā. Mādhavi performed the eleven dances in the Indra viḷā. Among the eleven dances, two were dances of Durgā, one as Bhairavi and the other as Durgā. That Bhairavi is addressed as Nṛttesvari in other texts is well-known, from works like the Malatimādhava. As mentioned earlier these eleven dances were performed by the dancing girl Mādhavi. Another instance of the dance, this time by a male dancer, named Kūttachākkai, is said to have been witnessed by the Chera king, Senguttuvan. The dancer performed the Kotticchedam performed by Śiva, with Uma as part of himself. The description of this dance clearly indicates the Ardhanārī aspect with all the features of Devi fully represented.

The Pattini Cult :

That the Silappadikāram extols the cult of Pattini is well known. Though this is not connected directly with Śakti worship, it is necessarily the worship of the female principle and is, therefore, worthy of study in this context. A lady who gave up her life when her husband died, either by throwing herself in the funeral pyre, or by some other means, was considered a Pattini, the goddess of chastity. She was deified and worshipped.

1. Swaminatha Iyer, Ibid., P. 506.

2. Ibid., P. 297.

3. Ibid., P. 317.

4. Ibid., P. 334.

Kannaki died on the 14th day after her husband's death, and she was worshipped by two sections of society, the people of the hilly region, where Kannaki gave up her life and secondly by the ruling monarch himself.

The worship by the hill tribes was no more than the place under the Vengai tree where Kannaki gave up her life. They immediately accepted her as the deity of their clan and offered worship to her. This worship consisted of blowing trumpets, beating small drums, ringing of bells, and offering flowers. This is the simplest form of worship that the hill tribes offered her. But they prayed that the worship would bring timely rain and fertility.

When the Chera King, Senguttuvan, decided to erect a temple to Kannaki, it was considered necessary that he should obtain the stone for carving the image of Kannaki from the Himalayas. Though suitable stones were available in his country, it was counselled that he should bring the stone from the holy Himalayas which alone would befit his greatness. The third canto of this epic is devoted entirely to the northern expedition of Senguttuvan, his bringing the stone and erection and consecration of the temple of Kannaki.

Though the entire episode as described is legendary and has very little of history, it nevertheless contains valuable information on the mode of erection and consecration of the temple to the goddess.

An auspicious day was selected for the expedition to bring the stone, and the king with his retinue and army started out for the purpose. After overcoming the encounters a suitable stone was selected and the image of Pattini was carved. The carved stone was brought to the banks of the Ganges and bathed in the holy river in conformity with the Sāstric rules with the help of masters versed in ritual.¹ On this occasion the King honoured his soldiers with golden flowers, which was more than he would present even on his birthday. The expedition returned to the capital with the King leading the soldiers on an elephant to the accompaniment of music and dance.

In the company of Brahmanas, Āchārya, the astrologer and the Śilpāchārya, Senguttuvan got the temple of Pattini constructed in all its parts according to the prescribed rules, so that it might win the approval of the wise. Therein was installed the image of Pattini, carved by skilful sculptors. The image was duly decorated with choice ornaments of exquisite workmanship. At the entrance to the temple were stationed the guardian deities. Worship was offered with flowers. Having thus consecrated the deity, Senguttuvan instituted daily rites and festivals.

After the consecration, there were music and dances at the end of which the goddess appeared and blessed the King. The goddess Pattini consecrated by Senguttuvan is referred to as the daughter of the king.²

1. Swaminatha Iyer, 27-11 to 24. Also VRR, P. 305.

2. Ibid., 29-31.

A miracle happened when Senguttuvan was standing in front of the goddess. A certain lady Devantikai became god-possessed and asked the Brahmin Māḍalan to sprinkle water on three girls standing nearby, which would reveal their previous birth. When so done, it was found that they were the mothers of Kannaki and Kovalan in the previous birth. Then the Chera king completed the ceremonial rites; other kings like the northern rulers, Kongu King, the King of Malva, and Gajabahu of Ceylon, prayed reverentially to the deity that she should grace their country also with her presence. The goddess granted their request. After praising the goddess and placing the lady, Devantikai in charge of worship of the temple, Senguttuvan retired to his vedic sacrificial hall.

In this royal consecration, the entire process from the selection of stone to the installation, and the institution of daily rites and festivals (nityapūja and nityatsavas), is clearly after the Āgamic code of the higher castes. This is in distinct contrast to the simple deification by the hill tribes. Further two things stand out prominently in this chapter. Though Senguttuvan went on expedition for bringing the stone and constructed the temple and instituted worship, he was primarily a follower of vedic sacrifice, as he is shown returning to his vedic sacrificial hall, at the end. Secondly, the office of priesthood for the temple of Kannaki, was entrusted to a lady Devantikai, which suggests that it was not uncommon, to have lady priests for temples of goddesses. In this case, Devantikai was a Brāhmaṇa lady is worth mentioning. It may be suggested that the consecration of Śakti images and institution of daily rites could not have differed very much from the above.

When new cults came into existence, especially with the royal support, they spread to other countries as well, and people were ready to accept such new faiths and assimilate them with their own.

MANIMEKALAI

The *Manimekalai*¹ is a well-known epic in Tamil, narrating the story of a lady Manimekalai, who became a Buddha Bhikṣuṇī in the end. The main aim of the work is to extol the greatness of Buddhism, in preference to other schools of Indian thought. The date of this epic is far from settled and various views exist among scholars. We will not be wrong in holding that it belongs to a period earlier than the Pallava supremacy in Tamil Nadu for it carries no reference to this dynasty in its long narration.

It has interesting references to the Śakti cult as prevalent in Tamil land. Four forms of the goddess are prominently mentioned in this work and they are : (a) Champāpati, (b) Kaṭukāl, (c) Vindhyavāsini and (d) Chintādevi.

Champāpati :

The goddess Champāpati² occupies a prominent position in the epic. She is the presiding deity of the city of Kaveri-pumpaṭṭinam, which was originally called

1. U. V. Swaminatha Iyer (Ed.), Manimekalai, Madras, 1956.

2. Ibid., P. 1-2.

Champāpati. From the description of the deity it is evident that she is none other than Durgā, the Adhidevata of the city of Champā. She is said to be golden in colour like the rising sun, and wears matted locks, spread on all side. The goddess first appeared on the golden hill of Meru and came down South. She is also the presiding deity of the Jambūdvīpa. She is said to have stood below the Jambu tree and did penance to remove the sufferings of the world and to conquer the Rākshasas.

The above description of Champāpati, occurs at the very beginning of the work which shows the impact of the Śakti cult on this predominantly Buddhist work. The attributes of this deity are clearly traceable to the concept of Durgā as reflected in late Vedic and Puranic literature. Here she is described as golden coloured. The Vedic passage calls her Agnivarnā or Hiranya Varnā—sām agnivarnām tapasā jvalantīm.

That she had spread out matted locks of hair, shows her identity with Śiva. Her penance would recall the tapas performed by Parvati. That Devi's association with mountains is well-known and Manimekalai describes her as emanating from the Meru mountain. The Devī Māhātmya points out that the Goddess incarnated herself to destroy the Rākshasas and remove the sufferings of the world. From the above descriptions it is evident that the Champāpati, the presiding deity of the Champāpati is Durgā.

That Durgā appearing as the Adhidevata of a city or a grāma, is as old as 1st century B.C. A golden coin, issued by an unknown Indo-Seythian king, reads Pushkalāvati Devata,¹ evidently the presiding deity of the city of Pushkalāvati. Dr J.N. Banerjee has rightly identified her with Durgā. Similarly the description of Madurāpati Devata in Silappadhikāram, also points to the same fact that she is none other than Durgā.

Champāpati, also called the most ancient, received the river Kāveri whom she described as celestial Gangā. Sage Agastya asked the river goddess to pay obeissance to Champāpati and Champāpati gave the name Kāviriṣūmpaṭṭinam to the city after the river goddess. From the above it is evident that Śakti as the goddess was considered more ancient than rivers, mountains, etc., which in philosophical term would mean that she is Ādiśakti.

A further, somewhat more elaborate description of the deity occurs in chapter six of the work. It relates to a description of a cemetery temple, which was also called Chakravālakkottam.² The cemetery was situated outside the city near a upavana. It is said to have come into existence along with the city. It had an enclosure running all around with four decorated entrances; each having some one of the entrances had a painting of a divinely chariot, while another had a mural depicting paddy fields, sugarcane fields, ponds and pleasant groves. The third had no decoration but had a silvery finish with shining lime plaster. The fourth entrance had a huge stucco figure probably of Bhairava with pāśa and śūla.

Inside this cremation ground was situated a temple dedicated to Kālī, here called Kāḍamar Selvi, the deity of the forest. In front of the temple was an open yard and a balipitha. The tall trees in front of the temple carried heads of those who had sacrificed themselves willingly to propitiate the goddess. In the same cemetery there were Kāpālikas and Suḍalai Nonbis, who offered cooked food under the Vanni trees. There were also Mahāvratis, ematiated by their penance, making garlands of broken skulls under Ilatti trees.

1. J.N. Banerjee, op. cit.

2. Swaminatha Iyer, op. cit., Chapter 6.

The temple of Kāḍamar Selvi was inside the Smaṣāna is an interesting feature. Kālī is often referred to in literature as Mayāna Vasini. That people offered their head as offerings speaks of the Sākta cult. It is seen that such worshippers tied their head to the branches of trees and severed their heads. Such a practise is also alluded to in later works like the Kallingattupparaṇi. The head-offerings, a form of primitive cult was always associated with Śakti cult. Besides this, the presence of Kāpālikas and Mahāvratis in the vicinity is to be noted¹. It is said that śakti piṭhas were always found near Śiva temples. (The description of the cemetery seems to be close to the description of cemetery in Mālatimādhava a sanskrit work by Bhavabhuti.)

There was a belief in those days that the goddess Nagaradevatā, will remove all sufferings and injustices. Gautami, a lady lost her only son. She carried the dead body to the cemetery and pleaded with the goddess Champāpati, to bring him back to life. The goddess called all the gods of the place and asked whether anyone among them could bring back to life, the dead boy. The gods said that it was not possible. Gautami realised that it was impossible to restore life once it was extinct. She gave up her life as well. In this context Gautami addresses Champāpati as the greatest of gods and protectress of river banks, open yards, trees, residences and temples.

துறையும் மன்றமும், தெல்வலி மரமும்

உறையும் கோட்டமும் காப்பாய்

(வரிசை : 6-136-137)

Here the benign aspect of the deity is also alluded to.

The Maṇimekalai refers to a pavilion, in front of the temple Champāpati. Called the world forum,² it was an asylum to suffering human beings. Many ascetics were also there.

It is of interest to mention that this temple of Champāpati, and this Ulaka aravī play an important role in this epic. Many important episodes, often crucial to the development of the story, are seen enacted there. Maṇimekalai, herself a Buddhist, went and stayed there. She is seen often worshipping the goddess. When she got the akshaya-pātra, with which she could feed countless people, she went to the temple of Champāpati, offered worship to Her and then began feeding the poor in the ambalam.

It must be mentioned that the epic Maṇimekalai was essentially a Buddhist work, intended to propagate Buddhist religion. The heroine of the epic was herself a Bhikshuni, advocating Bauddha dharma. In such a work, we find the temple of Kālī.

1. Swaminatha Iyer, op.cit., 6-84-86.

2. Ibid., 17-86.

receiving a vital role and that even the Buddha Bhikshuni, often going to this temple to offer worship. It shows that the Śakti cult was so popular among the public, it was held in high esteem by all sects.

Meruchakra :

One of the interesting aspects of the Śakti cult, is the adoration of the deity in the form of a magical diagram, chakra. There seems to be a veiled reference to the existence of Chakra in Maṇimekalai.

It has been mentioned earlier, that the goddess Champāpati summoned all the gods to see whether anyone could bring back to life, a dead. Since all the gods assembled in the place of Champāpati, a temple was erected to honour the goddess. The whole structure was made of stucco.

In the centre was shown the tall Meru mountain; encircling were seven small hills. In the next circle were seven deep seas, equal in depth, to the height of the mountains. Beyond these were shown the form of dvīpas (the great islands) surrounded by 8000 small islands. In these were shown human beings, animals, plants, trees, etc. A careful study of this shows that it was a diagram maṇḍala representing a meru chakra, hence the name Chakravāḷakōṭṭam. The name Chakravāḷa has not so far been properly explained. To us it seems the term Chakravāḷa (chakra+āḷam i.e. circle) is a deliberate choice to suggest the Chakra maṇḍala aspect. That this concept of Chakra seems to have taken full shape even at this period is interesting. The following epithets of Lalita in Lalitā Sahasranāma may be remembered here with advantage.

Sumēru giri madhyasthā i.e. dwelling on the middle of Mount Meru. The Maṇimekalai also speaks of middle peak of the Mount Meru,

“naḍuvu ninṛa Meru Kuṇṇamum”¹

Maṇimekalai also states that this was in the centre of an ocean,

Sūl Kaḍal Valai iya Vāliyaṁ Kuṇṇam

Lalitā Sahasranāma says,

Sudhā Sāgara madhyasthā i.e. residing in the centre of the ocean of nectar. Hence the Chakravāḷakōṭṭam of Maṇimekalai is Chakra-rāja-nilayā of the Śakta cult.

Vindhyavāsini :

The goddess Kālī, is often referred to as Vindhyavāsini in Śakta works. This concept was also well-known in the time of Maṇimekalai. Vindhyavāsini is referred to by name in this work. The goddess Antari (i.e. Kālī) resided on top of the Vindhyā hill. Those who move through the air, will not dare to cross this mountain for the goddess would drag such persons through their shadow and swallow. She is also called Vindāghatikai. A certain character in the story called Kāyachandikā who accidentally crossed the mountain was swallowed by the goddess thus.¹ In this aspect she is described as a terrific goddess, destroyer of human beings, and as one dreaded by all men.

1. Swaminatha Iyer, op.cit., 6-193.

Cintādevi :

The Maṇimekalai, refers to a temple of Cintādevi, in south Madurai. The temple is called *Kalai Niyamam*² and the deity, goddess of Meditation, Cintā Viḷakku—(the light of Cinta). She is again described as Vāk devi (Nāmisai Pāvāc) the goddess of Gods and men, and undying light and as one who wards off sufferings.³

This Cintādevi gifted an Akshayapātra (a devine bowl) to a certain Āputra, who fed the poor with the bowl. This bowl was later obtained by Maṇimekalai, which forms an important episode in the story. It is seen that this deity was worshipped by all sections of the society (yāvarum ēttum i.e. adored by all).⁴ The temple seems to have been in a dark place and the people came to the temple during the darkness.

ஆரீருள் அஞ்சாது அம்பலமனைந்து⁵

Other Aspects :

Besides the above references to Champāpati, Vindhyaśāsinī and Cintādevi, a few other aspects are worthy of note. Kālī is said to feed devils (pēys) with the Kapāla in her hand.

காடமர் செல்வி கடிப்பசி அனைய
ஒடு கைக்கொண்டு வின்றாட்டுகள்⁶

Worshipping the goddess with mind, speech and body (Manas, Vāk and Kāya) is also alluded to. It also probably refers to prostrating three times at the feet of the devi.

முதியாள் கோட்டம் மும்மைவிற் வணங்கி⁷

YĀPPARUNKALAVṚITTI

Yāpparunkalavṛitti,⁸ is an important Tamil work on prosody. It gives well organised grammatical rules and cites a number of verses from early works as illustrations. The work is to be assigned to 9th century A.D. and as such the citations

1. Swaminatha Iyer, op.cit., 20-116-121.

2. Ibid., 14-10.

3. Ibid., 14-18-20.

4. Ibid., 14-10.

5. Ibid., 25-141.

6. Ibid., 18-115-116.

7. Ibid., 17-87-88.

8. M.V. Venugopala Pillai (Ed.), Yapparunkalam, Madras, 1960.

are earlier than that period. Among them a few verses occur extolling the greatness of Sakti.

In one of the verses,¹ occurs a graphic description of these goddess. She stands on the head of the haughty buffalo. She wears both Silambu and Kaḷal and manifests herself on the golden hill. She rides on a stag and is victorious in the battle field. She has destroyed the Asuras in terrific battles. Kūli followed her in her war expeditions. She was playing with balls (kriḍa kantugas). In her arms she carried a bell, a parrot, spear (trident), sword, shield, bow, (Koḍu) horn and a musical instrument.

This lyrical hymn is interesting in a particular way, since, it mentions a horn (cornucopia) as one of the weapons in her arms. Such a representation is not to be seen in Tamil Nadu, though cornucopia occurs as an important emblem of Śakti in early representations of her in northern India.

Yāpparunkalam also refers to the eleven traditional dances² said to have been performed by the gods. Among the eleven, Durgā is said to have danced the pole-dance (Marakkāl), and the Saptamātas are said to have performed Tuḍiāḍal. Silappadikāram does not refer to the dance of Saptamātas but mentions the dance of Bhārati (Bhairavi), called Pāṇḍaranga on the charriot in the presense of Brahma. However, this work mentions that Pāṇḍaranga was danced by Śiva himself. In the Devaram hymns the Pāṇḍaranga is said to have been performed by Śiva.

This Pāṇḍaranga is probably identical with 'ter mun Kuṇavai'³ in which, the King, vanquishing his enemy, dances with the victorious joy, on the war-chariot, in the battle field. It is, therefore, quite fitting that Śiva, dances Pāṇḍaranga at the battle field when he conquered the Tripurāsura. In the case of Devi we do not know whether she danced in the charriot when she destroyed the Rākshasas like Mahishāsura, Sumbha and Nisumbha.

KALLĀḌAM

*Kallāḍam*⁴ is an interesting Tamil work, dealing with 100 different love lorn conditions but with a special emphasis on the exploits of Śiva of Madurai. In fact, the main aim of the poem is to extol the greatness of Lord Śiva of Madurai, with the poetic convention of love lorn themes as a back drop. The author of the poems, called Kallāḍar, is assigned to the later half of the 11th century by scholars.⁵

In many of the verses, the dance of Śiva at Madurai is portrayed in vivid pictures. In most of these instances, the Devi is said to witness the dance. In describing the Devi, she is often mentioned as the daughter of Himavān.⁶

1. M.V. Venugopala Pillai (Ed.), Yapparunkalam, Madras, 1960, P. 247, 248.

2. Ibid., P. 443, 444.

3. U.V. Swaminatha Iyer (Ed.), Purapporuḥ Vnebāmālai, Madras, 1963, Verse 143, P. 67-68.

4. Kallāḍam, Murray S. Rajam edition, Madras, 1967.

5. M. Arunachalam, History of Tamil literature—11th Century; Kallāḍam, 1971, P. 32-34.

6. Ibid., P. 11-17, 22-27.

One of the poem, refers to the competition between Śiva and Kālī. (The entire dance of Kālī with various mudras, flexions of the body, and the rhythmic changes, are described in highly technical terms). At the end, Kālī could not compete, but stood by the side, vanquished and ashamed. Dākinī an attendant is said to have stood on her right.¹

Many verses describe her as the Mother of the Universe. A concept that received greater emphasis. In one verse she is described as the virgin, who gave birth to this great anḍa.

அண்டப் பெரும் திரள் அடைவு ஈன்றளித்த கன்னி
(வரிகள் : 6-36; 28-16. 17)

Umā who gave birth to the loka

உலகம் ஈன்றளித்த உமை
(வரிகள் : 25. 24)

எண்ணில் பெருத அண்டப் பெருந்திரள்
அடைவு ஈன்றளித்த பிறை நுதற் கன்னி
(வரிகள் : 28-16. 17)

உலகு பெற எடுத்த ஒரு தனிச் செல்வி
(வரிகள் : 60-29)

The marriage of Pārvati with Śiva also finds mention in a number of verses.

பனிக்கதிர் குலவன் பயந்த பாவையைத்
திருப்பெரு வதுவை பொருந்திய அக்காள்
(வரிகள் : 11-17. 18)

Here the reference is to Umā as Haimavati marrying Śiva. In other instances the local legend of Pārvati being born as a Pāndya princess with three breasts and Śiva marrying her is also referred to (13-12-13; 31-8-20). A graphic description of the marriage rites is seen in verse 31.

That the Devi forms the left half of Śiva is also alluded to (85-33).

An interesting reference relates to the Dēvi holding the bow when Śiva destroyed the Tripurās.

சென்னிமலை ஈன்ற கன்னி விற்பிடிப்ப
(வரிகள் : 26-24)

Verse 82-1-11 describes the cremation ground, the offer of head sacrifice, carrying lamps in hands, the goblins and Dākinis serving the Devi. The Devi who delights in such ghastly scenes, is said to be the very embodiment of kindness. She is said to wear the crescent moon and poison. She is also described as the mother of Muruga. Another verse (91) gives a detailed description of the desert, and the iconographic description of Durga. Of interest is the reference to Dākinis as her attendant. The Devi is said to wear green Tulasī garland, a green parrot on her front arm, silken garment on her waist and Trifūla in her hand. (She is said to have destroyed the Asuras). She bore three eyes, eight arms and protruding teeth like the crescent moon. The above description shows that the complete picturisation of Kālī has become very popular by that time.

1. M. Arunachalam, History of Tamil Literature—11 Century; Kalladam, 1971, P. 63-1 to 25.

The work also has another interesting reference which relates to a temple of Durgā, situated in the north of the city of Madurai. The description of Durgā, as one wearing anklets, necklaces, tulasi garland, and performing the pole-dance (மரக்காலை ஆட்டல்) are referred to. It must be mentioned, that in the lay out of villages and cities, vāstu texts prescribe the northern direction, for the temple of Durgā. Medieval epigraphs describe her as the deity of northern direction—Vadavāyilchelvi. The present work shows there was a Durga temple in the north of the city of Madurai.

KALINGATTUPPARANI

The 11th and 12th centuries A.D., particularly the latter may be considered the best period in the history of classical Tamil literature. Incidentally the period also witnessed the beginning of great works, directly based on Śākta Cult. Among them the *Kalingattupparani*¹ by Jayamkoṇḍār is not only the first but also the best work extolling the greatness of Kālī.

Parani Literature :

It would be useful to have a background to this type of literature. Parani is considered the Sanskrit equivalent of Bharani, a star. Bharani is the star of Kālī and also that of Yama, the god of death. A commentary on Tolkāppiyam states that it was a tradition to offer kūḷ, i.e. boiled soup and Tunangai dance to Kālī, on the Bharani day. The Kalingattupparani avers that this tradition was in Mahābhārata war. As Kālī is the giver of victory in battles, special offering made to her at the victorious battle field came to be called Parani. So the literature having as its main theme a signal victory over an enemy and described in a dramatic setting with Kālī as the main deity, came to be called Parani.

Kaḷavēlvi, a fore-runner of Parani :

No direct reference is met with, for Parani, in Sangam literature. But three types of poetic compositions called Kaḷavaḷi, Pin-ter-Kuravai and vāḷ mangalam, are the fore-runners of Parani literature as a full blown kāvya by 11th century A.D. Kaḷavaḷi or Kaḷavēlvi in Sangam period refers to the sacrifice offered by the victorious king at the battle-field. The sacrifice consisted of blood, flesh, flour, chopped off limbs of enemies, etc. These were used for preparing a salad, to be offered as a sacrifice in honour of the victory. That goblins were present in this sacrifice is referred to by the Sangam works. But the deity to whom the offering was made is not mentioned by name in any of the Sangam works. The later commentators like Nachchinarkiniyār, mention that this offering was intended for Korṅṅavai, i.e., Durgā or Kālī. In all probability it was the case. In which case we have to consider that Kaḷa-

1. Kalingattupparani.

vaḷḷ or Mara-kala-vēḷvi, of the sangam age as the forerunner of Paranī literature of later periods. However, none of the Sangam works, has given such an emphasis on Kālī cult as Kalingattupparanī or other Paranis.

The early Paranīs :

The Tolkāppiyam does not refer to the type of literature called Paranī. But a work called Panniru Pāṭṭiyal, assigned to the 10th century A.D. gives the grammar of Paranī literature. Though we have no surviving Paranī work which could be dated earlier than the Kalingattupparanī, it is possible that some Paranī works existed before. M. Arunachalam thinks¹ that the sūtras dealing with Paranī literature might have been later interpolations. His doubt is justified, for the earliest reference to a Paranī work occurs in 11th century A.D. Oṭṭakkuttar, another great Paranī composer refers to two early Paranis, Koppattu Paranī and Kūḍal-Sangama-Paranī, the former, signifying the victory of Rājendra Chola II, at Koppam and the latter, the conquest Kūḍal Sangama by Virarājendra Chola I. These two Chola rulers were predecessors of Kulottunga I. These two Paranis have not survived, but Jayakonḍār, the author of Kalingattupparanī could himself have been the author of these works or a contemporary of their author.

The earliest Paranī to have survived so far is Kalingattupparanī which unmistakably shows the Sākta cult in its full form.

The format :

The Paranī is usually set in the following format. After imprecatory verses, the young women of the city are called to wake up, and open the door of their houses and are invited to join in singing the glory of the victor. Generally this part is full of references to amorous sports of the ladies, with their victorious husbands. The next chapter deals with the greatness of forest, the abode of Kālī, followed by the description of Kālī and her attendant goblins. Then the hero, his ancestry, the cause of the war and a detailed description of the war follow. At the end, when victory was achieved, the goblins prepare a feast and singing the praises of the victor make an offering to goddess Kālī and delight in the feast. The entire literature is thus based on Sākta cult and is full of references to Sākta customs, and rituals in which sense they are a good source of information for the present study.

As mentioned earlier the Paranī literature seems to have become popular from the 11th century A.D. when two Paranis are said to have been composed, but they have not survived. Besides these two there was a Paranī written by Oṭṭakkūttan, on Vikramachola's conquest of Kalinga, which has also not survived. The Kalingattupparanī of Jayamkonḍār, and three lost Paranis mentioned above celebrated the victories of the Chola rulers. Oṭṭakkūttan has sung another Paranī on a puranic theme, namely the destruction of Dakṣha's Yagñā by Virabhadra. A few Paranis based on Puranic legends like Hiranyavadhā, etc., and others based on philosophic concepts, such as Aghñā-Vadhā (the destruction of ignorance) have survived. In all these works the role of Kālī, her attendant goblins and the offer of victory-sacrifice, form the main literary format.

1. M. Arunachalam, History of Tamil literature—12th century, Pt. 1, Madras, P. 379.

Kalingattupparanī :

Kalingattupparanī on Kulottunga, begins with an invocation to the Kalyanasundara form of Śiva. The verse itself is significant and truly reflects the spirit of the Śākta beliefs reflected throughout the poem.

Union of Śiva and Śakti :

"Adoration to Lord Śiva, who, in order to establish homely life in the world, married Pārvati, the daughter of Himavān, with Vishnu giving Pārvati, in marriage by pouring water and Brahman offering homas".¹ The invocatory verse begins with the union of Śakti with Śiva, an important concept of the Śākta religion. The term Punarnta used in this verse to denote marriage is also significant. The word Punartat stands for marriage as well as sexual union. Though its primary meaning in the context is marriage the poet has employed this word deliberately to suggest the sense of sexual union, i.e. maithuna, which is one of the Pancha makāras of the Śākta cult.

After the invocation of the marriage of Śakti with Śiva, other deities like Vishnu, Brahma, Surya, Ganesa and Subramanya are invoked in order. This is followed by salutation to Sarasvatī² who is said to reside in the tongue of Kulottunga. Again we come to the goddess Uma,³ who is described as a virgin. She bore red coloured Śiva in her right half, and prevented cupid's arrows aimed at Śiva, falling on her feet. This verse seems to indicate that though she is inseparably united with Śiva, is adored as a virgin by the Śāktas.

Saptamātas :

The next verse is dedicated to Saptamātās,⁴ the seven Mothers whose vehicles are also praised. The following are the mounts thus described: swan for Brahma, bull for Māhesvari, peacock for Kaumāri, elephant for Indrāni, buffalo for Vārāhi and goblin for Chamuṇḍa. The adoration of Saptamāta is of interest for they are the secondary deities, in the temple of Kālī. Perhaps this is the earliest work which includes separate invocatory verse for the saptamātas.

The next Chapter, as mentioned already, relates to the amorous conditions of young maidens of the city. The sexual unions of these maidens are portrayed in such a vivid manner that many an orthodox scholars, feel shy of this chapter.

The desert :

The third chapter describes the forest, the abode of Kālī, titled Kāḍu pāḍivatu i.e., the praise of forest. In Tamil literature and inscriptions, Kālī is described as

1. Kalingattupparanī, v. 1.

2. Ibid., v. 13.

3. Ibid., v. 15.

4. Ibid., v. 17.

the deity of the forest. Kaḍu Kiḷāl, Kaḍu Kaḷ, Vāna Nāḍi, etc. The Tolkāppiyam, divides the earth into four regions as hills, forest and coastal regions, and plains and each region has a deity of its own. Murugan is the Lord of hilly region, Vishnu of the forest, Indra of the plains, and Varuna of the coastal regions. In this scheme Kālī or Durgā is not conceived as the deity of the forest. In somewhat later period, a fifth, namely the desert region is also recognised. The desert region is said to be formed by one or the other region becoming a waste land. Koṟṟavai is considered the presiding deity of the desert region.

In this text, though the chapter heading reads Kaḍu Paḍiyatu, forest land, it in fact relates to desert in all its terrific nature. The description of this desert with all its horrors is indeed a poetic device, to enhance the terrific aspect of the Goddess, and the destructive nature of the war that is to be described. The poetic description of the desert land is excellent. The trees are said to stand like ghosts, withered and charred by the heat of the desert.

A unique temple :

The next chapter deals with the temple of the Goddess giving an insight into the mode of construction of a Kālī temple. The poet says though the desert land itself was the ancient temple of the goddess, dedicated by the very Creator, Brahma, we will describe a new type of temple erected for her. The poet's preface to the new temple is indeed apt; for the Kālī temple as described here is not only unique but also a strange one, being constructed of severed heads, bones, flesh, blood, etc., of the fallen soldiers, horses and elephants of the enemy. The work describes the process of construction from the garbhavinyāsa to the consecration.

The construction began with the impregnation ceremony of the building with the precious gems, an important ceremony in building structures that is done with the first brick-laying rite called ādyēṣṭakā vidhāna. According to some texts, four bricks, each representing a veda, are laid and in the cavity so formed, gold and precious gems are put invoking the vāstu dēvata. Then the whole is sealed by the fifth brick. This called the garbhavinyāsa, which is a must not only for a Kālī temple but for all structures. A stone used in the garbha rite, bearing an inscription in the reign of Kulottunga I, said to have been gifted by his sister, Kundavai, was noticed in Chidambaram. It is called Karu (garbha) in the inscription. Befitting the general trend of this poem, Jayamkondar says the gems so laid were the māṅgalyas of the wives of the opponent kings killed in the battle.

The walls of this peculiar temple, were erected with heads as bricks, flesh as mortar and blood as water. The pillars and the lintels were the wooden beams used in the fortifications of Kulottunga's enemies. Evidently enemy fortresses were destroyed and the wood used in this temple as pillars and lintels. The triangular wooden frame work called tula, for the roof and cross-reapers were made of the tusks of elephants killed in battle. The nāsikas, another architectural element, were made of yālis, elephants, pig and lion standards of the opponents, captured in the battle field. The roof covering was made of elephant hangings captured in the battle of Tungabhadra.

This temple of Kāli was enclosed by an enclosure wall and an entrance gopura, constructed with bones. This gopura was preceeded by a makaratorana of iron erected by goblins. On the top of the enclosure walls, the severed heads of peacocks, the heads of men offered as sacrifice, the heads of young babies also severed in sacrifice and blood-oozing flesh as standards, were placed as beautifying elements. The makaratorana captured from the Pāndyan capital, and the severed ears of war elephants were planted as swings.

The main shrine, a gopuram in front with a enclosure, a makaratorana and a swing, were the constituents of this Kāli temple. These elements of the Kāli temples have survived even to this day and in many parts of Tamil Nadu these could be seen, except for this difference that they are made of regular building materials unlike this fantastic temple of poetic creation.

The description of the main temple brings to light another fact. It was a thatched building, a Kuṭi, like the Draupadi Ratha at Mamallapuram. We must remember that in the 12th century A.D., monumental temples built of stone were the most popular, but the temple of Kāli retained the form of a thatched building. Evidently independent temples, dedicated to Kāli, still retained the traditional form. We have mentioned that a thatched hut is described as the temple of Devi, in Silappadikāram.

Head-offerings :

Certain rituals connected with Kāli worship are mentioned in this chapter. Three types of head offerings are mentioned in one of the verses viz. the heads of peacocks the heads of heroic men and heads of young babies. The peacock offering, Mayūra bali seems to have been popular. The head offerings by warriors are mentioned from Sangam period onwards, but the offering of young babies as bali to the goddess is mentioned for the first time in this work. That this gruesome offering to Kāli has become an accepted mode by the 12th century A.D. is evidenced from this verse. That this seems to have continued atleast upto 17th century is known from literature of that period. Another verse¹ says that like the roaring sound of ocean waves, the shouts of heroes offering their heads in return for the bestowal of boons were echoing all over the area.

In one of the finest verses, the process of offering a head, is portrayed. The sacrificer cut his head at the bottom of the neck and placed it on the hands of Kāli. The head thus presented sang the greatness of Kāli while the remaining trunk stood saluting the Goddess.² Another form of head offering is also mentioned. The severed head is said to be placed on the bali plītha before the deity. An Āndalai bird (a kind of vulture) mistaking the head to be a bird of its own species, approached it and was chased away by the trembling head. As the head was severed, the remaining trunk was quivering.

1. Kalingattuparaṇi, v. 109.

2. Ibid., v. 111.

Buffaloe offering is also referred to in this work. To the accompaniment of beating drums and shouts buffaloes were sacrificed and their blood offered.

The Kālī temple used to be swept, sprinkled with water and spread with flowers daily. In this work the poet says 'the horse' was used as alaku, the fresh blood as water and flesh offered as flowers. The fires consuming the corpses, resembled lamps.

There seemed to have been homās as well in Kālī temples. In this fantastic temple, the fire sticks were bones and the blood was used as ghee for the *homa*¹.

Sādhakas :

Sādhakas used to frequent this temple dancing to the beats of ḍamarukas. Evidently they were carrying the ḍamarukas (followers of Bhairava cult are said to adopt this practise). Yoginīs used to come to this temple carrying swords in their right arms and heads in their left arms. In fact the Kālī temple was full of blood, flesh, burning corpses, vultures, jackals and goblins.

The description of the Kālī temple as given above not only presents a ghastly scene but also gives a peep into the terrific nature of practises, which were accepted by the then existing society.

The Goddess :

Chapter five is equally interesting for it directly portrays the goddess here called Moti. The description of the Devi begins with her feet, evidently following the mode of description of gods, known as Pādādi kēsānta varṇana i.e. foot to head description. The serpent Vāsuki, which was used as a rope around the Meru mountain for churning the milky ocean and the other serpent Ādisesha, which supports the entire Universe on its hood, coil around the feet of the Devi as anklets. The heavenly stars were embedded as gems on these anklets. Her face resembled the moon and the tīlaka, the sun. Hers was a dancing form. Her breasts were as if vessels filled with ambrosia, and marked white with vibhūti by Śiva, so that he could enjoy it in seclusion in the forest. She wears the elephants hide presented to her by Śiva. Over this hide were tied as ropes, the intestines of the elephant, destroyed by Śiva and a serpent. Śiva gave this elephant's hide as a present to her, when he was pleased with his sexual union. These two verses again show the impact of the pañcamakāras of the Śākta cult particularly the maithuna, in which the Goddess and Śiva are said to have engaged.

The Devi is the mother of Brahma, Vishnu, Gaṇeśa and Subrahmanya. Her uttariya (upper garment) consists of a serpent, emitting fire, covering the breasts of the Devi which enamoured Śiva. Her hands are red as she drinks the blood of sacrificed heads, and becomes black as they are washed with the rut of the elephants.

1. Kalingattuparaṇi, v. 110.

When ālakāla poison appeared, the mountains began to melt; the ocean dried, smoke emanated and the living beings all around began to be charred and the Devas shivered. Śiva swallowed the poison. Under such a condition the Devi's lips gave him amuda. A mere glance of the goddess is capable of fanning the love-longings of Śiva but her sweet words, bewitching smile and rose lips would immediately quench his thirst.

The Kulagiris are worn by her as ear ornament. The same are also worn as garlands. She plays with the mountains as balls, Kaḷanju and ammānai.

If she desires there is nothing that is not achieved by her. The Devi's greatness is beyond description as she is the very embodiment of the meaning of pranava.

The above description of the Devi points out many important aspects of the Devi cult. She is considered the mother of all gods like Brahma, Vishnu, Ganesa and Muruga. She is all powerful. Śiva is always fond of uniting with her. She is a terrific goddess as a blood sucker and simultaneously benign bestowing all boons.

Pancha-prēta-āsana-āsina

Chapter six deals with goblins who are hunger-stricken and pray for food, but chapter seven gives some additional information on Kāli cult. Kāli is said to be seated on five prētas (panchaprēta) and has a goblin as a pillow. Her bed consists of the white part of the flesh, spread over the cot, having lamp-like legs. This bed of her is called Pancha chayana. She is carrying in her arms the weapons pinḍi and pāla. As she was thus seated an old goblin came and saluted her. Once this old goblin committed a mistake and fearing the wrath of Kāli, ran away and hid itself in the Himalayas. Rudra Yogini, who was herself a servant of Kāli, taught this old goblin, Indrajāla (hypnotism and mesmerism) which it performed before the Goddess.

That Kāli was seated on Panchaprēta and that she had a Rudra yogini as her servant are the points that interest us. In Śākta cult, Kāli is called Pancha pretāsanāsina which shows the full impact of Śākta tradition.

The succeeding chapters of Kalingattupparani deal with the geneology, birth and the conquests of Kulottunga and the last chapter has for its theme the sacrificial offering to Kāli at the battle field when Kulottunga gained the decisive victory at Kalinga. Kāli is here praised as Piṇam tarum Nāchchi i.e., giver of corpses.

TAKKAYAGAPPARANI

The work *Takkayāgapparaṇi*¹ (Dakshayāgapparaṇi) by Oṭṭakkūttar is by far the best literary work of the Chola period (12th cent. A.D.) which throws valuable light on Śākta customs and beliefs. Since the author was a court poet under three successive Chola rulers, we are sure of its date, and will be in a position to assess the impact of Śākta cult as evolved upto the period.

1. U.V. Swaminatha Iyer (Ed.), Takkayagapparaṇi, Madras, 1945.

Oṭṭakkūttan, a gifted poet and prolific writer adorned the court of Vikrama Chola, Kulottunga II and Rājārāja II. He has composed a type of poetry called ulā on all the three patrons and these works are now called Mūvar ulā (i.e., Ulā on three). He has composed two Paranis, one on Vikramachola's conquest of Kalinga and the other on the destruction of Dakṣha Yagña. The former however has not survived while the later is undoubtedly the best among the poet's creations. Besides the Ulās and Paranis, Oṭṭakkūttan has sung many other poems like Kulottungan Pillai Tamil (on Kulottunga II), Gāngeyan Nālāyirakkovai (four thousand amorous poems on a patron, Gāngeya), Arumpai Tolḷāyiram (Arumpai, nine hundred) and Iṣṣi Elupadu (spear seventy), etc.

Oṭṭakkūttan was such an accomplished poet that he was called Kaviccakravartī (Emperor among poets), Kavi Rākshasa, and Kāḷakkavi. Kāḷam means piper. A special previllage seems to have been conferred on him by the king in recognition of his poetic genius, that when he went out, pipes were blown announcing his visit; hence the name Kāḷakkavi. His mastery of various sāstras earned him the title Sarvajña Kavi. It is said that when he was composing the Ulā on Rājārāja Chola II, the King presented him one golden coconut for each verse.

Oṭṭakkūttan was a great devotee of the Goddess Saraswati, which he mentions in one of his verses. But it is in describing the Śakti cult that he excels. In many verses he makes pointed references to yāmaḷa tantras and other works connected with the Śākta religion.

The Takkayāgaparaṇi, has an excellent commentary, by an anonymous author. According to tradition, the commentator was a disciple of Oṭṭakkūttan himself. In all probability he was. In many places he refers to historic personages, mentioned in epigraphs, otherwise unknown. His diction and vocabulary reflect the Chola period. In his commentary he at times refers to variant readings and comments on them. Probably the variations were made by the poet himself. At any rate he is not far removed from Oṭṭakkūttan, the author of the Parani. The Commentator gives such an excellent exposition of the verses and their meanings, it is impossible to deal with this work without the commentary. For the purpose of our study, both the text and its commentary are taken together, indicating at appropriate places, whether the views are in the text or commentary.

The Takkayāgaparaṇi, set in the conventional pattern, deals with the appearance of Virabhadra at the command of Śiva, and punishing the gods who participated in the Dakṣha's, sacrifice and the gift of a goat's head to Dakṣha. As mentioned in Kalingattu-paraṇi the work includes the description of Kālī, her forest, her temple, the attendant goblins and her worshippers. At the end, when Virabhadra defeated all the gods and destroyed the Yagña, the goblins offered Kāḷavēḷvi to Kālī, who delighted in the feast. The narration of the story need not detain us here. We will confine ourselves to the elements of Śākta cult alone in this study.

Identification with Vishnu :

Among various aspects of the Dēvi, described in this text one of the most striking feature is the complete identification of the Dēvi with the attributes of Vishṇu.¹ She is called Māyoḷ which is the feminine form of Māyan i.e., Vishṇu. According to popular purāṇas, Vishṇu took the form of Mohini, distributed nectar to Devas and Asuras and in the process deceiving the Asuras, gave it to the Devas. In this text the goddess is said to have assumed the form of Mohini to distribute Amṛtapāna to the Gods and put an end to the life of *Asuras*². The Dēvi, like Trivikrama Vishṇu is said to have measured the Universe with her lotus feet. These are said to have reached the Mokshaloka, piercing on the way the Ākāśa, the elāchakra (Sūrya), Mahāmēru, the clouds and the cyclonic storms.

She swallowed the fourteen universes, as amṛita through her rose lipped mouth and created them again, through the red lotus issuing from the naval of her beautiful abdomen. The Dēvi moves on her mount which is Garuḍa. Here the allusion is to Vishṇu as Krishna swallowing the entire universe through his mouth and creating the universe through Brahma who issued forth from his naval. That she had Garuḍa as her vehicle also suggests her Vishṇu aspect.

The Dēvi slept on the coiled serpent on the milky ocean³. She was wearing Kausika silk and garment. (Śiva wears skin while it is Vishṇu who wears silk). The Goddess has the serpent king Ādisesha as her seat. This thousand hooded cobra had thousand precious gems, and the hoods and gems resembled thousand milky oceans and thousand Ādityas. (It alludes to the thousand hooded Ādisesha). Its eyes emanated deadly poison, like the vāḍava fire residing in ocean. Its teeth were bent like the crescent moon, with full of poison. This snake was greater than Meru.

The Dēvi carried the five weapons, the daṇḍa, khaḍga, bow, conch and discus associated with Vishṇu. Her body was green in colour like emerald. (Vishṇu's colour is maragata). She is said to be seated thus on her seat Anantasayana.⁴

The above attributes of the Dēvi clearly indicate that she was Vishṇu as such, described by the commentator as Vishṇu Māyā. The probable reason for the identification of Dēvi with Vishṇu, was that she was always considered the sister of Vishṇu. The second reason probably was that Vishṇu formed the left half of Śiva in his Harihara aspect. Dēvi also formed the left half of Śiva and as such the two, namely Vishṇu and Pārvati forming the left half of Śiva were considered identical. Such absolute identity is noticed for the first time in this Tamil work.

Śrīdevi and Sarasvatī were gifted to Umāparameśwari as strīdana by their respective husbands Vishṇu and Brahma, so that they may serve the goddess⁴. They are said to have placed their lotuses at the feet of the goddess. The commentator gives an

1. U.V. Swaminatha Iyer (Ed.), op. cit., v. 104.

2. Ibid., v. 107.

3. Ibid., v. 111.

4. Ibid., v. 110-7.

interesting explanation. Besides Śrīdēvi Viṣṇu had Bhūdevi as his consort. Likewise Brahma had Savitri in addition to Sarasvatī as his consort. Śrīdēvi and Bhūdevi worshipped Parameśwari (who is the giver of all soubhāgyas—Soubhāgya Kartṛ) with their red and white roses respectively, in order that they may be the favourites of their husbands in preference to others. The Parameśwari granted their prayers.

Moṭi or Durgā parameśwari forms the left half of Śiva. The seven oceans, the seven crevices, the seven mountains and the Chakravāḷa mountain reside in her part.¹ She mounts on the sharp-horned deer.² She made the heart of her husband melt in love for her payodhara. She also rides on a sturdy lion.³

The Dēvi is wearing a serpent as pendant with precious gems, and a fine necklace of pearls. Makara kuṇḍalas adorn her ears while Vāhuvalaya, bracelets with Yāli face, decorate her shoulders. One half of her is that of her Lord Śiva, whose intense love she commands. While she was lying on the serpent, Śiva united with her.⁴ The Dēvi carries Śūla in her hand.⁵ A parrot is to be seen on one of her arms⁶ and a crescent moon on her jaṣas. She is fond of music.⁷

The Dēvi's feet are adorned with nūpurās; the Veda mantra-sākas also adorn the feet of the Dēvi⁸.

When the Dēvi takes bath in mānasa-tīrtha of the Himalayas, Lakshmi caresses her feet and Bhūdevi touches her body (obviously help her in bathing). Sarasvatī will be seated in front of the Goddess listening to her commands.⁹ Dēvi's foremost quality is her pativrata-dharma. By her effulgent jyoti, she is Omniscient.

The Temple :

It is impossible to describe the temple of the goddess as it is far beyond descriptions. The seven nether worlds, also called the sapta pātālas, are the lower tiers of her temple and the seven heavenly worlds form the upper tiers. The two mountains udayagiri and astagiri, stand at the entrance. The seven oceans act as the godown of her temple. The Chakravāḷagiri acts as the enclosure while the trident in her hand stands as the raksha of the whole temple. Mahodara, Guṇḍodhara, and Vyāghra mukha, and other Karanagananāthas stood as gate keepers. After they permit, Brahma, Viṣṇu, Rudra, Īśvara and Sadāsiva, who are the deities of the elements enter the temple. The balipīthas of the goddess, who is Viśveśvari, and Vedanāyaki, are the Mahāmēru. At the entrance of the temple there is the Padmanidhi.¹⁰ Swans and

1. U.V. Swaminatha Iyer (Ed.), op. cit., v. 48.

2. Ibid., v. 75.

3. Ibid., v. 74.

4. Ibid., v. 111.

5. Ibid., v. 137.

6. Ibid., v. 608.

7. Ibid., v. 114.

8. Ibid., v. 119.

9. Ibid., v. 221.

10. Ibid., v. 73.

peacocks dance in the temple of the goddess¹ while Indra and others play musical instruments.² Sūrya and Chandra are the perpetual lamps burning in her temple.³

Here we may make a digression on the temple of the goddess as portrayed in the Kalingattupparani and the Takkayāgapparani. In Kalingattupparani, we saw a temple—a fantastic temple indeed—said to have been erected with flesh, bones, blood etc. There the entire description was based on gruesome battle that formed the subject matter. But here the purpose was a divinely theme and all the descriptions are soul elevating divine concepts which incidentally shows the Supreme nature of the Goddess as the very embodiment of the Divine nature. In that sense Takkayāgapparani is certainly an improvement over its predecessor. While the Kalingattupparani states that the temple was in the form of a hut, the shape of the temple is not indicated in this work.

The present text deals with a Vata Vriksha, a banyan tree as the abode of the Dēvi. This tree comes in for special and detail treatment in this text. The description is again more poetical and philosophical than real. It is said to have supported the entire andagolas (mundane egg), when the ocean dried at the deluge. 'Even if all the twelve suns simultaneously shine, causing all the oceans to dry by their heat, their rays, can not penetrate through the leaves to the ground below which was ever cool. If one Brahma dies one leaf will fall from it. If that leaf falls in the ocean, the entire ocean will be dried up. If the fire of deluge arises, that itself will be charred and allowed to fall by the cool shades of the branches. When the final cyclonic storm, which is capable of uprooting not only the universe but also the various Kulagiris by its velocity, blows even a single leaf of the tree of the Goddess will not be moved by it. When there comes the final rain to destroy the world, this tree will protect it.

When Vishnu swallowed the fourteen worlds, he wanted to recline and found the milky ocean insufficient. He came and slept in one of the leaves of this tree. Śiva sat under its shades and taught the sixty-four kalas to his followers. When the entire world was being destroyed by Varuna and Vāta at Sarva saṁhāra lokayugānta (the very end of the world), this tree would give protection. Mahādeva will sleep beneath its shades spreading elephant skin as bed and likewise Vishnu will safely recline on his serpent (Ananta). The peacock of Subrahmanya, and the Garuḍa of Viṣṇu, are from this tree. The (ashtamahānāgas), the eight directional elephants (ashṭadikgajas) are tied to the shoots of the tree.

In order to emphasise the supreme nature of the Goddess, the gods of all other faiths, like Vishnu, Śiva, Subrahmanya, etc., are shown either taking protection under her tree or derive their mounts, weapons etc., from it, a poetic and at the sametime ingenious method of glorifying the goddess.

1. U.V. Swaminatha Iyer (Ed.), op. cit., v. 111.

2. Ibid., v. 112.

3. Ibid., v. 137.

The temple of the Dēvi is adored by Bhūta and paisāca ganas. The Vedas and Sivāgamas adore her temple. The temple of Išvari who is praised by Yoga Yāmala Sāstras, is liked by all the eight gaganāthas. In her temple, Vishnu learns Śivagñāna Saiva Siddhānta Sāstra taught by Śivamahādeva. Likewise Brahma and Indra recite the Śiva Āgamas. In the front yard of the temple, the divine damsels like Urvasi and Rambha pay obeisance.

The Yoginis in the temple of Paramēśvari, resembled Mohinis not by their own beauty but by constantly meditating upon the goddess who herself was Mohini. Some damsels in the temple of Paramesvari were called Carmini. Carminis are those who cover themselves with skin.¹ But here the Carminis were the bearers of Dēvi's feet. The Śākinis whose number could not easily be counted were the standard bearers of the Dēvi.² According to the commentator the Śākinis are women, born of Brahmin mothers of the love of Śiva.

The work is also remarkable for the information it provides on the followers of Yāmala Tantra in their worship of Kālī. The followers of Mayānavāsini are the mantra Sādhakas who put on the dress of Bhairava (Bhairava vesha) and are called Bhairavas in the text and Bhairava Veshadhāri in the commentary. They will select the sensitive heads among themselves, sever and offer them to the goddess as flowers, sira pushpas which are heaped as mountains. Since the land of the goddess is the dry desert, all the heads would be charred and burnt to ashes by the heat of the desert. The disciples of these mantra sādhakas, coming to do archana and desirous of carrying the sirapushpas as nirmālya, will laugh on seeing the heads charred to ashes.³ The Commentator says "the Yāmalaśchāryas are those who are well versed in the Sakala Pañchakas which are liquor, fish, flesh, sign and sexual union (Madhu, Matsya, Māmsa, Mudra and Maithuna). This information is available in the Āgama Sāstras of the Mahāvratin". The above note of the commentator shows that there were practicioners of the Sakala pañchaka in Tamil Nadu, in the 12th century A.D.

The mantra sādhakas of the Yāmala sāstras of Paramesvari, will cut their own heads, but prevent their lives being extinguished and retain it in their bodies by their Yoga. Then standing before Paramēśvari in rare poses, kindle their Yogic fire (Yogāgni), and light the halo of fire agni maṇḍala in the naval part of their body (nābhī kamala) and allow the lamp of hṛdaya kamala (the lotus of heart) to burn as a perpetual lamp. This⁴ is undoubtedly an interesting reference to the Yogic practises of the Mantra sādhakas, who believed that after offering their heads, they could raise their kuṇḍalīni śakti and allow it to burn the lamp of heart. It must be remembered that the word Yoga yāmala referring to the goddess indicates the Yogic tilt of the text.

Some Mantrasādhakas will cut their hearts and head, and their remaining trunk will circumambulate the Dēvi temple with folded hands.⁵ This is expressed in a fine

1. U.V. Swaminatha Iyer (Ed.), op. cit., V. 88 (Commentary).

2. Ibid., v. 89.

3. Ibid., v. 51.

4. Ibid., v. 91.

5. Ibid., v. 92.

poetic form. 'When they cut hṛdaya kamala, their vadana kamala (face) will blossom and when their Vadana kamala was severed, their hridaya kamala would blossom. When both were cut, their hands will fold as a Kamala (Kara Kamala) and the trunk will circumambulate the temple'. It only shows that when they cut the limbs of their body, they never screamed in pain but learnt to bear with it and even rejoice at it.

Some mantra sādhakas wore black shirts with rows of cowrie shells stitched on to it.¹ The Lord Bhairava himself is called Kariya Kanjugan, wearer of black-shirt. Some Mantra sādhakas will place lamps on their body and head and burn them in front of the deity. This peculiar custom has survived to this day. In the temple of Vaidhesvaran Koil in Thanjavur district, people take a vow to burn such lamps. They lie in front of the deity with a lamp on their chest or on their forehead. They lie in the same position with the lamps filled with ghee and lit, till the lamps burn themselves out. Probably this is a survival of one of the Śākta cult referred to in the above verse.²

In the temple of the Dēvi, there are five flower gardens, consisting of Kalpa, Pārijāta, Mandara, Cantana and Arichandana trees. The five flowers of Manmatha, namely Mā, Asoka, Kamala, Mullai and Kuvalai, can not penetrate into these gardens. (i.e., these are pure and kept free of cupid's sports).

In the temple of Dēvi, the main Yāmaḷas like the Brahma Yāmaḷas and the secondary Yāmaḷas numbering 91, and the 18 purāṇas (Brahmāṇḍa purāṇa is the first, Vishnu Purāṇa the middle and the Kūshmāṇḍa purāṇa the last) praise the greatness of the goddess. Obviously they were studied in the temple.

Some followers will be dancing violently when the drum called Tuḍi was beaten. Some would move around and cut to pieces the vultures. Some would capture the tigers alive, skin them and wear their skins as garments, with blood still oozing out from them.³ Some would wear the Umattai flowers on their head and move about, with tridents in their hand⁴ and yet others will capture eight deadly serpents, and tie them around their waist as belts. There were others who will insert human skulls into these snakes and tie the same as waist band.⁵ Probably some tied them on their hands also. When heroic people fell (in encounters) some would take in their fingers the blood from the intestine and wear it as tilaka on their foreheads. They would also be wearing thirteen chank-shell chains in their arms.⁶ Yet others would carry vajra in their right arms and shields in their left arms.⁷ There were also others who would wear green leaves as garments and be adoring cakras till such time that their bodily heat burns up the green leaves.⁸

1. U.V. Swaminatha Iyer (Ed.), op. cit., v, 93.

2. Ibid., v. 60.

3. Ibid., v. 97.

4. Ibid., v. 98.

5. Ibid., v. 99.

6. Ibid., v. 100.

7. Ibid., v. 101.

8. Ibid., v. 102.

In short Indra, Agni, Varuna, Vāyu, Chandra, Sūrya, Nakshatras and all other Brahmas are Mantra Sādhakas in the temple of the Dēvi and they also received fame and prosperity (aishvarya) by their Sādhanas. The women who do personal service to the Goddess are Lakshmi, Saraswati and other Pradhāna stars, who are the Yoginis performing Yoganishta.

PERIYAPURĀNAM

Tirumurai

The Śaiva tradition has collected all the devotional literature and compiled them into twelve books called the twelve Tirumurais. The twelfth is *Tiruttonḍar purāṇam*¹ popularly called Periyapurāṇam. The work deals with the life of Śaivite saints traditionally accepted as sixty-three.

Sekkilār

Sekkilār, the author of this work was a minister to one of the Chola ruler, Kulottunga II in the 12th century. Sekkilār was a fine historian of his period. On account of his ministerial training he had great love for records and contemporary events which he portrayed in his work with remarkable lucidity. Thus it is the most outstanding literature of the period, to which scholars turn for an understanding of the society of the age.

As he himself was steeped in Śaiva tradition, Sekkilār took up for his subject, the lives of Śaivite saints as originally told by Saint Sundaramūrti in the 8th century and later elaborated by Nambiāṇḍār Nambi in the 11th century A.D. As its main purpose was to extol the greatness of Śaivite saints, especially the events leading to their saint-hood, Periyapurāṇam mainly deals with intense devotion to Lord Śiva. As, the cult of Śakti, has developed to a great extent, it is undoubtedly reflected in the work.

The concept of Ammāi appa, Universal parenthood, has already reached the final form and is referred to in many episodes. In fact while bestowing grace on the saints, Śiva always appears with his consort Śakti.

Begins with Love

As opposed to the principles of negation of worldly life (Sanyāsa), the work begins with an acceptance of worldly pleasures, especially carnal love as the beginning of the story. Though the work deals with the lives of 63 saints, Saint Sundaramūrti is the hero of the poem. Saint Śundara was an attendant of Śiva in his previous birth. He fell in love with two girl-attendants of Śakti where upon Śiva directed him to be born in the world and get his love towards the girls consummated. So begins the story.

1. Tirutondarapurāṇam of Sekkilar Srivaikuntam, 1964.

This we consider an important departure from other schools, where time and again, the worldly pleasures are despised as perils to God-realisation. In this significant text, we will refer to the attributes and other manifestations of Dēvi and also descriptions of some followers of Bhairava cult, which has some bearing on our subject.

Tavakkoḍi

Dēvi witnessing the dance of Naṭarāja at Chidambaram is called the creeper of Penance—Meytavakkoḍi.¹ This Dēvi, the mother of the seven world, did penance on the banks of the river Kampā at Kanchi and obtained Śiva as her husband.²

She is the ruler of the Universe—Ulagam Aḷuḍaiyā. Śiva taught her the Āgamas, on mount Kailāsa, and told her, that the pūja as prescribed in Āgamas was the one he loved most. There upon the Dēvi expressed a desire to do the pūja of the Lord.³ Śiva conceded her request and directed her to do the worship at Kānchipuram under the mango tree. As she proceeded to Kanchi, the serpent king Padmanāga approached her uttering the pañchākshara mantra (Namaśivāya). Śiva manifested under the mango tree. Dēvi began her worship which consisted of Tirumanjana (sacred bath), gandha, dīpa, dhūpa, etc. as prescribed in the Āgamas. To test her devotion, Śiva made the river Kampā, to suddenly overflow with floods. Dēvi out of her intense love, immediately embraced the linga she was worshipping. Śiva appeared before her and blessed her. Dēvi wanted her remaining worship also to be accepted by the Lord where upon Śiva said that he was so pleased with her worship, he would receive it for ever from her hands. In order that the entire world will ever rejoice in married life, She stationed herself at Kama-kotṭam the temple of Kāmākshi at Kanchi. This story of Dēvi doing pūja at Kanchi has a greater significance which we will discuss at later stage. Here we are to note a few points of interest.

(1) That the Āgamic mode of worship knew no barrier of sex or caste. It was absolutely in order, for Dēvi, a female to do pūja as prescribed in the Āgamas.

(2) The chapter in which this episode is narrated is not directly connected with Dēvi but with the life of one saint Tirukkurippu tonḍar who hailed from Kanchi. Sekkilār has chosen the subject of Kanchi as the native place of this saint, to describe the episode of Dēvi's worship. This is a deliberate attempt to accomodate the legend of Dēvi as otherwise the whole work is mainly on the Śaiva saints. This shows that the cult of Kāmakotṭam has attained greater popularity.

(3) Thirdly we have noticed the advent of the serpent king Padmanāga. We are not sure how this finds a place here. Probably it is a survival of an earlier belief associating Dēvi with Nāga, the significance of which has been lost now.

(4) Fourthly, the Dēvi is described here, as the Mother who has given birth to everything in the Universe.

1. Tirutondarpurānam of Sekkilar, Srivaikuntam, op. cit., 1: 1: 32.

2. Ibid., 1: 1: 34.

3. Ibid., 2: 19: 51-52.

(5) That she is the destroyer of the birth cycles is also mentioned.

Wife Gifted

In the life of Saint Iyarpahai,¹ we have another interesting fact of the Śaiva cult. Iyarpahai was a merchant and a great Śiva bhakta. Śiva who appeared at the doors of his house as a Brahmin was received with all respects and courtesy. On being asked the purpose of his visit, the Brahmin said, he would put forth his request if Iyarpahai would agree to grant it. The merchant replied immediately saying that to please a Śiva bhakta, he would place at his feet his entire possession. The Brahmin there upon told the merchant, that he came to the merchant's house to take away his wife. The merchant agreed to gift away his own wife to the Brahmin. But the mendicant asked the merchant to give him protection till he was able to reach a safe place. With a sword in hand, the merchant went in front of them, offering protection. But the clan of the merchant who came to know of this ghastly episode tried to intercept the Brahmin. But the merchant put them to sword. Thereupon Śiva blessed him. This story thus depicts an extraordinary event, in which a man gifts away his own wife to a bhakta. It is perhaps an indication to the one pointed devotion of the Śiva bhaktas.

Mahāvratin

The story of Mānakkanjāra² another saint, gives us an insight into the mode of dress and behaviour of a Mahāvratī sanyāsin. Mānakkanjāra arranged for the marriage of his only daughter. On the day of marriage, Śiva as a Mahāvratī sanyāsin came to his house. His request was a curious one. He requested Mānakkanjāra to cut the long hair of his daughter and give it to him for panchavaṣi. The removal of hair of a woman is considered very inauspicious as it is a symbol of widowhood. This sanyāsin, demanded the removal of the hair of a young girl on the day of her marriage. This was done, out of devotion.

The description of the Mahāvratin who thus appeared is interesting. A part of the head was shaven and on the remaining śikhā, bone beads were tied; kuṇḍalas adorned his earlobes; the necklace consisted of bone-beads; a pātaka resembling a snake was on the shoulders; his upavīta was made of hairs; the sanyāsin was carrying a bag of sacred ashes; in his front arm was tied a sūtra (thread) with a bead; He was wearing a rag of cloth to cover his private part and on his feet were the five mudras (Pancha mudras). This sanyasin is called Māvratā mūḍi in the text.

Bhairava veshadhāri

The most striking information on the followers of Bhairava faith is furnished by the story of saint Sirutṭonḍar.³ The story is briefly as follows : Sirutṭonḍar once a commander of a Pallava ruler, who conquered Vātāpi, turned a Śaiva saint and was known for his devotion to Saivite devotees. Śiva appeared before him as a

1. Tirutondarpurānam of Sekkilar Srivaikuntam, op. cit., 2: 3.

2. Ibid., 2: 12.

3. Ibid., 2: 36.

Sanyāsin of the Bhairava sect, Bhairava Veshadhāri. (From this we learn how Bhairavins of the mediaeval periods dressed).

The saint was wearing a dishevelled hair and over the black hair wore a garland of white kurumbai flowers; and on the forehead sacred ashes resembling crescent moon. In the earlobes, ear rings made of chank shell, set with a red flower were worn; the necklace consisted of stone beads of white marble; the body was covered with black kanjuka (shirt) over which channavira, hāra, vāta, armlets, katisūtra, anklets, etc., all made of bone-beads were worn. A silambu adorned his feet. In the left hand he was carrying a kapāla and over the left shoulder a triśūla was rested and in the right arm, he was carrying a damaruka.

The Śiva sanyāsin wearing this Bhairava vēsha approached Siruttoṇḍar with one of the strangest and ghastliest demand of food. The request was this; A boy being the only progeny of the family, should be cut to pieces by his father helped by his mother. The flesh of the boy should be cooked and offered to him as food. The Sanyāsin demanded even the head of the boy to be cooked and offered to him.

The story goes that Siruttoṇḍar helped by his wife cut his only son, cooked his flesh and offered it to the Sanyāsin. The Sanyāsin asked Siruttoṇḍar also to eat the food, but asked him to call his son to dine with them. The miracle happened when Siruttoṇḍar called his son. The boy who was cut to pieces and cooked came running from a distance with joy. Lord Śiva in the company of Śakti and their son Skanda, appeared before Siruttoṇḍar and blessed him for his extraordinary devotion.

The legend apart, we are given to understand that such Bhairavaveshadhārins existed, who ate human flesh. The dark black shirt, the bone garlands, kapāla, sūla and damaruka being carried in their arms, are some of their characteristics which are seen represented in sculptures of the period.

We have given this account, though it is not directly connected with Śakta cult, because of the close relationship between the Śāktas and Bhairavins.

Apart from these points of interest, one dominating element throughout this work, deserve mention, in relation to Śakta cult. In all the events leading to sainthood of the 63 devotees, Śiva appears in the company of Śakti, and blesses them. This shows that Saivism of this period has completely assimilated the finer aspects Śakti cult which is reflected in monumental architecture as well.

Dēvi Temple Worshipped First

We have noticed earlier, that at Kanchipuram, there was a temple separately dedicated to Śakti in the name of Kāmakkoṭṭam. This Dēvi considered the consort of Lord, is the presiding deity of Ekambaresvara. Saint Sundaramūrti, one of the three Devāram hymnists, on his return voyage to Tiruvarur visited Kanchi.¹ He first went to the temple of Kāmakkoṭṭam and offered worship before going to the temple of Ekambaresvara. This shows the importance gained by the temples of Śakti.

1. Tirutondarpurānam of Sekkilar Srivaikuntam, op. cit., 2: 29: 284.

III

TANTRISM IN TAMIL DEVOTIONAL LITERATURE

TIRUVILAYADALPURĀṆAM

Sixty-four legends connected with the sports of the presiding deity of the Lord of Madurai, form the theme of two outstanding Tamil works, by the name Tiruvilayāḍal-purāṇam.¹ The earlier one is by Perumbarrappuliyūr Nambi who is assigned to 13th century A.D. Paranjoti who elaborated the same in excellent poetry, is assigned to 18th century. We are mainly concerned with the former. All the sixty-four sports portray the greatness of Śiva, and we have very little said of the greatness of Śakti. Among the sports, one is significant. It refers to the birth of Taṭātagai (Mīnākshi) as the daughter of Malayadhvaja Pāṇḍya. She had three breasts from her birth. It was told that if she met her would-be husband, the third breast would disappear. Taṭātaka, though a girl, succeeded her father to the throne, a rare case of a princess ruling the country. She conquered all her opponents and won victories in all the directions. At last Śiva appeared before her, on seeing whom, her third breast vanished. Śiva married her and assumed the rulership of the Pāṇḍya country.

In this story relating to Mīnākshi, we get no reference to the Sākta cult or concepts.

In the invocatory verses of the text there is an invocation to Mīnākshi, who is described as the giver of wealth and knowledge.² In the chapter on Madurai city, there are two significant verses. One describes Durgā, as Kanya.³ She was the destroyer of Mahishāsura and the protector of the city. Her temple was in south, where perpetual lamps were burnt. Her colour is described as green.

1. U.V. Swaminatha Iyer (Ed)., Tiruvilaiyadarpuranam of Perumparrappuliyar Nambi, 1927.

2. Ibid., v. 7.

3. Ibid., P. 20, v. 12.

The other is Kālī who is described as the protector of the city in its northern direction. She was the destroyer of Dārukāsura and was the giver of victory. Her name was Selli.¹

That the city was protected by Durgā, Vishṇu and Kālī is again referred to in verse 53-16.

As Perumbarrappuliyur Nambi, the author of this text is assigned to 13th century A.D., it is evident that in the layout of the cities, Durgā and Kālī, continued to play important roles as protectors and were worshipped during that period. Secondly legends were beginning to appear on the Dēvi as consort of Śiva though the miracles are still centered around the Lord.

As the second work on the same theme by Paranjoti, is late it falls outside our present study.

DEVARAM HYMNS

The Bhakti movement spearheaded by the Śaivite saints and Vaishnavite Ālvārs was mainly responsible for the development of temples and arts. Their songs made the hearts of millions of devotees melt in devotion and gave a divine joy which could not be achieved by any material acquisitions. But for their works, the Tamil land would have been a dry land of people living and dying like herds of sheep.

Appar, Jñānasambandar and Sundarar are the three shining stars in the horizon of Śaivite literature. They have sung several hundred verses on Śiva, enshrined in various temples of Tamil land. Towards the end of the 13th century, their works were collected and codified as the first seven books of the Śaivite canon. Sambandar's poems are included in the first three books and Appar's poems constitute the 4th, 5th and 6th; Sundarar's work form the 7th. They are called Devārams in Tamil. The word Devāram is interpreted in two ways : (1) Deva+āram i.e. a divine garland and (2) De vāram i.e. the hymn to be offered regularly to the gods. May be both the meanings were intended. They are all in hymns of ten verses each and are sung in praise of presiding deities of various temples. Some temples like Chidambaram have many hymns sung by the saints. They visited on foot temples, from Kanyakumari in the south to Kalahasti in the north and instilled in the minds of the people intimate longing for divinity.

Among the three, Appar and Jñānasambandar were contemporaries. Appar was born of a Śaiva Vellala family and in his early age was fascinated by the Jaina faith. Later he returned to his parent faith and took up the task of spreading bhakti among the masses. His return to the Śaiva faith angered the Jain monks who are said to have influenced the Pallava ruler to persecute him. Having failed in his persecution the Pallava ruler himself was converted to Śaivism. This Pallava ruler is none other than that versatile genius, Mahendra I. Though the story of persecution may not be true, Mahendra's change of faith is mentioned in the Tirachirappalli cave inscription,¹ where he says that he embraced Śaivism from an alien faith. I have discussed this inscription and the date of Appar elsewhere.² Mahendra ruled from A.D. 590 to 630. Appar must, therefore, be assigned to the first half of the 7th century A.D. He lived upto a ripe age of 80 years.

1. U.V. Swaminatha Iyer (Ed.), Tiruvilaiyadarpuranam of Perumparrappuliyar Nambi, P. 20, v. 14.

Jñānasambandar, a younger contemporary of Appar had a very short life of 16 years. While Appar converted the Pallava ruler, Jñānasambandar converted the Pāndya ruler, Arikesari Māravarman, who came to the throne about A.D. 650.

Sundaramūrti lived a century later. He refers in his hymn to a Pallava ruler who is identified with Rājasimha, and should be assigned to the 8th century A.D.

In the hymns of these three great saints, the main deity receiving adoration is Śiva, but Umā is invariably mentioned in her various associations with Śiva. In almost all the exploits of Śiva, she is an active participator.

The following aspects of the Dēvi are mentioned in their hymns. The Dēvi wears a jaṣāmakuṣa, in which are Ganga and the crescent moon. The Dēvi plays with Kantuka and parrot (Pandum kiṣiyum payilum pāvai). In the Kailāsanātha temple of Kanchi, Durgā is shown playing with Kantuga (balls). In all her representations the parrot is also shown. That she resides in the half of Śiva as Ardhanārī is frequently referred to. That Dēvi is said to wear ashes (vibhūti) on her body is also mentioned. She is said to wear the red silken garment (which is called Koṣikapattu). That she is Tripurasundari, who destroyed the three cities is mentioned by Appar. The arm that carried the bow in the destruction of Tripura is the hand of the Dēvi—Tripuram seṟṟa Angaiyāl.

One interesting aspect of Dēvi is that She is the giver of grains (Vasundharā). She is said to have protected dharma by distributing paddy seeds. This concept is alluded to even in the 8th century, in a verse of Sundarar—Taiyalāl Ulaguyya Vaitta Kārirum poḷil Kacci.

Dēvi is the presiding deity of the cemetery Suḍalaināri. She is Ādiśakti among Śaktis (Saktiyāl Ādiyōr Taiyal). She is young Kumari, Ilamādu. She has no equal (Samānādhika varjitā of Lalita Sahasranāma). She is identical with Mahālakshmi—Peruntiru, Peruntirumakāl. She is of golden colour—Ponnin Uruvanta meni Umā (Hiranyavarṇā). She performs penance tapas.

An interesting reference which however is not reflected in sculpture is that Dēvi sings songs while Śiva dances—Gitam Umai pāḍa Vedamudalvar ninuṟāḍum. Dēvi worshipped Śiva with great love. Dēvi is the author and exponent of the vedas—Umai urai seyyum aval marai oliya. She is the embodiment of music, and carries fire in her

1. South Indian Inscriptions. Vol. 1 no. 33.

2. Dr. V. Raghavan, 60th birthday Felicitation volume.

The above references are sufficient to show that various concepts connected with Śakti are already known to the 7th, 8th century Devaram hymns. It is also interesting that various sculptural representations in the Kailāsanātha temple Kanchi reflect these Devaram hymns rather than the later day silpa texts. In the chapter on Kailāsanātha temple, I have shown the representation of Dēvi in her various manifestations and the references in the Devaram hymns to all these aspects are thus interesting.

TIRUVĀCHKAM

Mānickavācrakar

*Tiruvācakam*¹ is a collection of soul stirring devotional hymns by Saint Mānickavācaka. He is held in very high esteem by followers of south Indian Śaivism and his poems are marked by a direct appeal to the Lord couched in different poetic expressions. Two collections of poems are assigned to him : (1) the Tiruvācakam and (2) the Tirukkovaivār, consisting of verses describing love longings but intended to extol the greatness of the Lord of Chidambaram. So the second one is also called Chirrambalakkovai.

His Date

The date of Mānickavācaka is strongly debated. Scholars who hold the saint in high reverence find in his writing evidence to date him to the 2nd and 3rd century A.D. Other scholars would place him in the 9th century A.D. In his poems, the saint refers to a Pāṇḍya ruler Varaguna as a great devotee of Śiva. Recent epigraphical researches prove that he could be Varaguna II, who ascended the throne in A.D. 862.² He seems to have been a saintly ruler, described as one who ruled the country ever enshrining Lord Śiva in his heart. Though he was the crowned ruler, his brother Parāntaka Viranārāyana held the reins of the kingdom and issued records in his own regnal years. Evidently Varaguna being a pious ruler, entrusted the rule to his brother. The language of Mānickavācaka's hymns and the highly developed concepts given expression to would not place him earlier than the 9th century A.D.

Tiruvembāvai

Of all his poems, the most popular, called Tiruvembāvai, is of great interest for our study. It consists of 20 verses all of them ending with the words "Mārkaḷi nīr āḍelo rembāvāy" and hence called the sacred Embāvāi (Tiruvembāvāi). It exhorts young girls to come out of their houses for taking bath in the early hours of the morning in the month of Mrigasthīrā. Even to this day the practice is maintained, in that people get up in the early hours of the morning in the month of Mrigasthīrā and go to take bath in a river or pond nearby singing these poems.

In all the known manuscripts, the poem has the caption Saktiyai Vīyāntatu i.e. extolling Śakti.

1. Tiruvācakam, Ed., Saiva Siddhanta Samajam, Saiva Siddhanta Publishing Society, Tiruvavadhurai.
2. A.S. Gnanasambandam, Manikkavācakar, Annamalai University, 1974.

While all the poems of Mānickavācakar are addressed to Lord Śiva this alone has the distinction of being related to Śakti. According to tradition the first nine verses of this poem are intended for the nine Śaktis, each Śakti waking up the other. The first verse stands for Manonmani waking up Sarvabhūṭadamani.

Sarvabhūṭadamani, waking Balapramathani
Balapramathani waking Balavikarini
Balavikarini waking Kalavikarini
Kalavikarini waking Kālī
Kālī waking Raudri Raudri waking Jyēṣṭhā and Jyēṣṭhā waking Vāma.

All the nine Śaktis praise the greatness of Lord.¹ This is the accepted tradition by most of the followers of Saivism. But the late Pandit M. Raghava Iyengar has drawn our attention to many references to this custom of bathing in the early hours of the morning in the month of Mṛgasīrā or Tishya in Tamil and Sanskrit literature. He has shown that this tradition is connected with the worship of Kātyāyāni, also called Ambā. His contribution forms a brilliant chapter in the history of south Indian Śakti cult and is worth recording.²

Mārgali Nonbu

“The worship is called Mārgali vow. Though from the commentary of Periyavāccan Pillai, on Tiruppāvai hymns of Āṇḍāl, it is seen that the celebration has no vedic sanction, it is evident from various references in Tamil and Sanskrit works, there was a hoary tradition relating to this Vrata. Both the Śaivites and Vaishnavites celebrate to this day, this festival of Margali month.

According to Periyavāccān Pillai, the commentator on the hymns of Āṇḍāl, the following is the origin of this festival. “Once there was drought in Gokula. The Āyas (Gopālās) selected Krishna as their leader and made their own girls celebrate this festival. Accordingly Krishna, the girls, and their mates were woken up and led to the river Yamunā, where they took bath. After celebrating this worship obtained Krishna as their husbands as desired by them.”

The source for this commentary was obviously the 22nd Adhyāya of the tenth skandha of Srimad Bhāgavata. According to this source, the girls of Gokula began the worship of Kātyāyāni pūja at the end of hemanta ṛtu. They continued the worship, eating havis. Before dawn they got up and took bath in the river Yamunā. In the wet sand they made the figure of Kātyāyāni Dēvi and worshipped her with sandal, flowers, fruits, etc. and prayed “Kātyāyāni he Mahāmāyē; Mahāyogini, Isvari we adore Thee, grant us Krishna, the son of Nandagopala as our husband”. Repeating this request they continued their worship for one month. One day Krishna appeared at the river bank and hid their garments as they were taking bath. Finally when they prayed to him, Krishna said, "with whatever longings you all adored Kātyāyani those will be fulfilled and you will attain me this night". From the above commentary two facts stand out prominently viz. virgins performed this Mārgali pūja in praise of Kātyāyani : (i) praying for rain and (ii) praying for suitable husbands.

1. S. Dandapani Desikar, Tiruvachakam, Notes Dharmapuram, 1949.

2. M. Raghava Iyengar, Āraichi Tohuti (Tamil), Madras, 1964.

"From such expressions as Nam Pāvaikku Seyyum Krisaikāḷ (from our rites to our Pāvai) etc., the term Pāvai stands for Dēvi is evident. We must note that Kātyāyani Pūja was performed irrespective of Vaishnavite or Saivite faiths.

"The hymns of Mānikkavācaka on Mārgali Pūja are said to have been sung at Tiruvannamalai, according to the Tiruvādvār purānam in which it said that the Dēvi as the destroyer of Vikramāsura as Mahisha, was adored. The Tiruvālavā-yuḍiyār purāṇa mentions that these hymns were sung at Tirupperunturai. Just as Āṇḍal prays for rain in Tiruppāvai, Mānikkavācaka also in his verses prays for plenty of rain and it is therefore evident, that both these traditions have common aim. The tradition that the first nine verses of Mānikkavācaka relate to the nine Śaktis does not seem to be correct. When there are twenty verses all having the common aim and ending, it is not correct to say that only the first nine have references to Śakti. We must take it that the entire hymn is in praise of Kātyāyani.

"One of the poems by Nallanduvanār in Paripāḍal collection refers to Ambā Āḍal, in the month of Tai. The verse states that this worship was done by virgins, praying for rains. They bathed in the early hours of the morning and stood adoring the Vedic altars. The poet called it Ambāvāḍal which evidently stands for the worship of Dēvi.

"Though the poems mentioned earlier refer to the worship as Mārgali, this poem calls it Tai (The month of Tishya). This need not puzzle us; one accounts probably followed the Chāndramāna tradition, while the other the Sauramāna tradition which in essence are the same. The Sangam works Kalitogai (59), Aingurunūru (84) and Narrai (22) refer to Tai nīrāḍal.

"All evidences would point out that the worship was originally devoted to Kātyāyani by Virgins, praying for rains and suitable husbands. In due course the original tradition was forgotten and the worship came to be associated with the Lord and the exclusive worship by virgins discontinued.

"The echo of this ancient tradition is still found in the Malabar country where Tiruvādirai is celebrated."

This some what long summary of the late Aiyangar's researches prove that Mānikkavācakar's Tiruvēnbāvai hymns were intended to be sung in Kātyāyani vrata. However, Śiva is extolled in the verses themselves. The prayers are rains and Śivabhaktas as husbands.

Our Mother

However, verse 14 of the poem directly extols the lotus feet of the Dēvi :

பேதித்து நம்மை வளர்த்தெடுத்த பெய்வளைதன்
பாதத்திறம் பாடி ஆடேனோர் எம்பாவாய்.

Kāli and Umā Blessed

In addition to Tiruvembāvai, hymns, Mānikkavācaka refers to the association of Śakti with Śiva in some of his other hymns. In Kīrti Tiruvahaval the Cosmic Dancer of Chidambaram is said to have bestowed grace on both Umā and Kāli.

பொலிதரு புலியூர் பொதுவினில் நடனவில்
கவிதரு செவ்வாயுமையோடு காளிக்கு
அருளிய திருமுகத் தழகுறு சிறுககை இறைவன்.

When Dārukāsura was killed by Kāli in a fierce battle, no one could subdue Her wrath and her destruction went unabated. Śiva, therefore, began dancing a wild dance which brought Kāli to senses. This episode is what is referred to in this verse.

It is interesting to mention that in stone sculptures representing Naṭarāja, Pārvati is portrayed on one side witnessing the dance and Kāli is seen dancing behind Śiva. The earliest example of this comes from a cave excavated by one of the commanders of the Pāndya ruler Parāntaka Neḍunjaḍaiyan in 8th century A.D. The other best illustration comes from Gangaikonda Cholapuram, built in 11th century A.D. The remarkable fresco at Thanjavur also portrays this episode.

Māyā Śakti

In his Porri Tiru Ahaval, Mānikavācaka refers to six crores of Māyā Śakti :

ஆறுகோடி மாயா சக்திகள்
வேறு வேறுதம் மாயைகள் தொடங்கின.
(வரிகள் : 44-45)

This six crore Māyā Śaktis are also referred to in Tirumandiram. This number six crore stands for innumerable manifestations of Śakti.

In other hymn, called Porchunnam Śiva is said to manifest and bestow grace in the company of His consort Śakti.

Describing the cause of Śiva's dance, a verse in Thiruchchālal (268) says that had Śiva not resorted to dance, the entire universe would have become, meat to the Kāligana. Metaphorically it means the Universe will be a place of chaos if Śiva remained an idle spectator. In order to bestow grace, Śiva danced. Here again, there is the veiled reference to Śiva subduing Kāli who continued to remain ferocious after the destruction of Dārūka.

Śakti resides in Śiva and Śiva in Śakti and both resides in the heart of the devotees (Koyil mūṭta Tiruppadigam). The verse 536, refers to the concept of Universal parentage as Ammal Appar.

There is a hymn consisting of ten verses, under the name puṇarchi pattu. Puṇarthai means uniting. The word is often used to denote sexual intercourse. Hence the commentators of this poem say that this relates to the union of the Soul with Śiva, which may be called Advaitic intercourse (Advaitakkalavi). We are not sure whether this concept is a mere poetic probability or whether it is due to the impact of Vāmāchāra.

Essentially Śaivism

Mānīkavācaka has left 656 verses in Tiruvācakaṁ, all of which extol the greatness of Śiva only. We have seen there are references here and there to the aspects of Śakti as universal mother who manifests with Śiva and also the reference to Kātyāyāni vrata. But neither the Tantric cult, as reflected in Tirumandiram, nor that Śiva actuates the Universe through Śakti, find any prominence. Hence Mānīkavācaka's expressions reflect the pure Śaivism, of the Suddha Saiva school.

TIRUMANDIRAM

One of the most remarkable works of Sāstric nature in Tamil language is *Tirumandiram*¹ by Tirumūla deva. The work consisting of 3000 verses under nine chapter called Tantras, is also called Tirumandira mālā and is included as the tenth book in the Śaiva canon. Tirumūladeva was probably a cowherd and his life as usual is wrapped in a mystic legend. As he is mentioned by Sekkilār, he should be assigned to a period earlier than 12th century. His work is full of mystic utterances based on Tantras and has not been subjected to modern critical studies. S. Dandapani Desikar, a modern commentator has said that "this work has been studied only with linguistic chauvanism and religious fanaticism and a rational study is yet to be made". S. Desikar's commentary is valuable and to the extent possible reflects the sense of the poems which are to a great extent still obscure.

"Tirumūlar gives out the experience both in a classical language and of the masses; the ecstatic outpourings of a siddha are also there in his work. These three elements perhaps tend to make his poetry uneven and a little obscure in places although the overwhelming ecstasy of experience and the flash of brilliance are always present."²

The Author

A glimpse into the life of Tirumūlar, is got from his own works and also the tradition preserved in Sekkilār's Periyapurāṇam.

Sundaranātha

The original name of Tirumūlar seems to be Sundaranātha.³

தந்திரம் ஒன்பது சார்வு மூவாயிரம்
சந்தரன் ஆகமச் சொன் மொழிந்தானே.

(வரிகள் : 101)

1. "Thirumandiram", a. Saiva Siddhanta Publishing Society, Madras.
b. Tiruvavaduturai Ed.
c. Saiva Siddhanta Samajan Publication.
2. 'An Introduction to history of Tamil Literature', by M. Arunachalam, Madras, 1974, P 144.
3. Tirumandiram, verse 101.

In the work "Mantra three hundred" the name Sundaranātha is specifically mentioned :

மந்திரங் கொண்டு வழிபடுவோர்க்கு
சந்தரநாதன் சொல்லிய மந்திரம்.

It is evident that the original name of this saint was Sundaranātha.

The Legend

"With a desire to meet sage Agastya, Sundaranātha came to Tamil Nadu, from north Kailāsa, after crossing Kedāra, Nepāla, Avimukta and other places. When he came to Sattanur near Tiruvāḍuturai, he found the cowherd Tirumūlan lying dead and his cows crying pitifully near him. Out of compassion for them, Sundaranātha left his own body and entered into the body of Mūlan. Subsequently his own body was lost and he had to remain in the body of Mūlan. Sundaranātha in the body of Mūlan was the author of Tirumandiram". This is the story¹ given by Sekkilār in his Periṇṇa-purāṇam. Though this is only a legend preserved in tradition it is important for reconstructing the history of the text.

Divination

It has been a hoary custom to trace the origin of any religious text to heaven such as Kailāsa in the case of Śaivism and Vaikunta in the case of Vaishnavism, in order that it may assume sacredness. Further, some mysterious and at the same time divine episodes are narrated to give the origin of any text, a status of authority. Innumerable examples could be cited. It is not in any way different in the case of Tirumandiram and its author. Historians have, however, to confine themselves to realities.

In the case of Tirumūlar two facts stand out prominently. As Sundaranātha he came from Kailāsa, via Kedāra and Nepāla. The second, is that he is said to have entered the body of Mūlan. Probably Sundaranātha was the teacher and Mūlan was his disciple. Mūlan so ably put forth the teachings of his master, it was considered that he was none other than Sundaranātha himself.

Judging from the expressions of Tirumandiram, it is evident that only a person steeped in Tamil language and tradition could express such subtle and intricate philosophic thoughts in such a mystic language. The tradition that he is a native of Sattanur corroborates the evidence.

According Tirumandiram, the nine Tantras constituting this book were based on nine āgamas. It is believed that quite a considerable number of āgamas had their origin in South India and what Tirumūlar tried to synthesize in his work was, the then prevalent belief. Thus it is evident that his work reflects the faiths prevalent in the native region.

1. Tirutondarapurāṇam, 2: 30: 1:—28.

However, in the process of this remarkable synthesis that other incoming ideas were also absorbed cannot be denied. It is in this perspective the advent of Sundaranātha from Kēdāra and Nēpāla to Tamil land, should be viewed.

The Nātha Cult

There was a popular sect in northern India, called the Nātha sect, in the medieval period. The followers of Nātha school were votaries of Śiva and Śakti with a strong bias towards Sākta tradition. The origin and development of this sect is not very clear. The following account of the sect in a recent work is worth noting. "On the esoteric cults of Mediaeval India Nāthism is important. It is heterodox in character and its followers are still found in different parts of Northern and North eastern India. Once it was also popular in some parts of Maharashtra. Modern Nathism of Punjab, Uttar Pradesh, Nepal and Bihar, has been mixed with the principal existing religions of the said regions, while in Bengal and Assam, the Natha Yogis want to preserve their separate identity. The origin of Nathism is covered in mystery. Fragments of mediaeval Natha literature are preserved in Bengali language, a critical examination of which must show that Nathism was originally a primitive Mother Goddess cult that came into India, from outside.

However judging by the north Indian regional literature on the Nātha yogis and the variety of myths and legends connected with them, it would seem that the Nātha movement in its developed form was a north Indian one and that it was amalgamated with the Śakti cult. Their religious discipline was that of haṭayoga, which was an article of faith with them. Their objective was to attain the state of Jivan mukti or immortality in life, through the process of Uṭṭa sādhanā, that is by making the semen flow upwards instead of downwards and the kāya sādhanā that is, by disciplining of physical body they believed that the imperfect body could be transformed into perfect and then into divine which was the only way to overcome decay and death. The right and left nerve channels were designated as the sun and the moon, the former standing for fire or heat and the later for Somarasa, the nectar essence. The sun was identified with Śakti or the female and the moon with Śiva or Male".¹

"One of the founders of the Nātha cult which in essence was a form of Tantrism, was called Goraksha, the cowherd."²

Tirumūlar—a Follower of Nāthism

The fact that Sekkilar mentions Kēdāra and Nēpāla as places from where Sundaranātha came to Tamil land shows that those places were held in high esteem by the followers of Sundaranātha. That Tirumūlar, the author of Tirumandiram was said to have been a cowherd, very closely resemble the Nātha tradition. Tirumūlar himself is called Tirumūlanātha. In the prologue of Tirumandirām, Tirumūlar himself says that he got the name Nātha by the grace of Nandi—Nandi Arulāle Nāthanām Peyar Perrom.³

1. "History of Sakta religion" by N.N. Bhattacharya, 1974, P. 129-30.

2. "Lokayata" by Devi Prasad Cathopadhyaya—pa.

3. Tirumandiram. v. 68.

நந்தி அருளாலே நாதனும் பேர்பெற்றோம்.

(வரிகள் : 68).

That Tirumandiram extols the greatness Śakti is evident in the fourth Tantra which is almost exclusively Sākta in its outlook. That Tirumūlar himself states that he adored Śakti¹ :

புவனாபதியாம் அருந்தவச் செல்வியை
சேவித்து அடியேன் பரிந்துடன் வந்தனன்.

(வரிகள் : 75).

Bhuvanāpathiyām Aruntavac celviyai sevittu aḍiyen Parindu uḍan Vantanam.

Tirumandiram emphasises yoga, particularly the raising of Kuṇḍalini through Idā and Pingalā.

In this connection another aspect also deserves special mention. Though the Nāthas were Tantric followers they never advocated the Vāmācāra namely Pancha makāras and the lāṭā sādhanā of the Śaktas. "The Nātha sect never indulged in this type of Śakti worship (Vāmācāra)".² Though Tirumandiram speaks so much of Śākta and Bhairava cults it does not advocate the Vāmācāra. It would be clear that a close resemblance exists between the Nātha school and Tirumandiram and that considerable ideas of the sect have permeated and is reflected in legends and thoughts of Tirumūlar.

Tamil and Sanskrit

Tirumūlar gives many important facts about the text, teachers and schools to which he belongs. He refers to twenty-eight Śaiva āgamas and also records the tradition that the āgamas were taught by Śiva to Uma.³ He asserts that Śiva taught āgamas both in the Tamil and in Sanskrit languages—Āṟiyamum Tamiḷum uḍane solli Kārikaiyārku karuṇai cheytāne.

ஆரியமும் தமிழும் உடனே சொல்லி
காரிகையாருக்கு கருணை செய்தானே.

(வரிகள் : 65).

also in—*Tamiḷccol Vaḍacol ennum ivviraṇḍum Uṇarthum Avanaḷ uṇarthalum āme*⁴.

From among the twenty-eight āgamas, Tirumūlar has drawn from nine āgamas which he mentions as Kāraṇa, Kāmika, Vīra, Chīnta, Vātula, Yāmaḷa, Kāḷottara, Suprabheda and Makuṣa.⁵

1. Tirumandiram, v. 75.

2. "Śakti cult in Ancient India" by Pushpendra Kumār, Varanasi, 1974, P. 164.

3. Tirumandiram, v. 163.

4. Ibid., v. 66.

5. Ibid., v. 63.

The School

In his Guruparamparā, Mūlan says that there were originally four disciples of Nātha viz. Sivayogamuni, Patañjali, Vyāgrama and Tirumūlan. They are said to belong to the Nandi group. It is not known whether there was any sub-sect among the Nātha school called the Nandi group. Tirumūlar says that the four obtained the name Nātha by the grace of Nandi.¹ (It is of interest to mention that among the Jains, there was a gaṇa called Nandi-saṅgha.) Among the Śaivaites, the Nandi lineage (Paramparā) was very powerful, Tirumūlar had seven disciples Matangan, Indran, Soman, Brahman, Rudran, Kanturu, Kālāṅgi and Kanchamalaiyān.² Four of his disciples went to the four directions³ carrying his message. In all probability Mūlan and his disciples assumed the title Deva or Natha and were probably called, Mālāṅganātha, Indranātha, Somanātha, Brahmanātha and so on.

Śakta Cult

Mūlan says⁴ that by the grace of Lord, he is composing this Āgama. Thus it is evident that this is an Āgama composed in Tamil, based mainly on the nine āgamas mentioned earlier. The inclusion of Yāmaḷa and Kālottara, would suggest that Mūlan drew also from Śakta Tantras, which is reflected to a very great extent in the text. In fact Mūlan says that he adored the lotus feet of that great Goddess of Penance Bhuvanāpati.⁵ He further says that he has come to expound the cosmic dance of the Dēvi who is (Sacchidānanda svarūpi), Niratisayānanda svarūpi, and who is said to have removed his cycle of birth.

The Nine Tantras

Of the nine sections called Tantras, the first Tantra deals with upadesa, the transitory nature of wealth and the physical body, etc., the greatness of non-violence, refraining from drinking intoxicants, etc.; the second gives the esoteric meanings of some of the manifestations of Śiva, such as Ashta Viratta, Lingapurāna, Panchakritya, etc.; the third with Ashtāṅga Yoga and Ashtasiddhi; fourth with Ambala Chakra, Bhairavi Mantram, etc.; the Caryā, Kriyā, yoga and Jhāna are dealt with in the fifth, while in the sixth Tapōvesha, Jhānavesha, Guru Darśana are dealt with; the seventh has the six Ādhāras, Sivapūja, Gurupūja, etc., as its topic. The removal of desires, greatness of Bhakti etc., are dealt with in 8th, while in the last, are detailed Panchākshara and Śiva darśana.

An Original Contribution

It may be seen, from the above that the Tirumandiram does not follow the four fold division of the āgamas as Caryākāṇḍa, Kriyākāṇḍa, Yogakāṇḍa and

1. Tirumandiram, v. 68.

2. Ibid., v. 69.

3. Ibid., v. 70.

4. Ibid., v. 73.

5. Ibid., v. 75.

Jñānakāṇḍa. Nor does it deal with the process of installation, etc., which are elaborately dealt with in the Āgamas. It does refer to various forms of fire offerings, the construction of altars (Kuṇḍas) etc., but in every case it emphasises the esoteric significance and in that sense is an original contribution. As it has drawn from various texts of Āgamas, its message is not unitary in character, but has paths prescribed for various followers. But it does emphasise to a very great extent the yogic path of raising Kuṇḍalīnī Śakti to sahasrāra. This is essentially Yoga-Jñānamārga and is not the Bakti cult in the ordinary sense.

The description of Śakti's kuṇḍās, mantras, yantrās, and their bijāksharas as given in this text are so remarkable, one would immediately treat this as a Śākta text per excellence, in Tamil.

The text in its elaborate descriptions, does not mention the Pancha makāras, and latā sādhana which shows that it is the Dakshina school. In fact Tirumūlar, decries the taking of intoxicants and meat. There is no reference to matsya at all. Though maithuna is referred to, it is always in its esoteric sense. This shows that here is a Śākta school, having all the aspects of the other Śākta schools but without the Vāmamārga.

We list below the names of Parāśakti as mentioned in this text to show the Śākta traditions :

Ādi Bhairavi	Caṇḍikā
Agocari	Sūlini
Abhirāmi	Sukhaparasundari
Ashṭa Śakti	Māmāya
Ānandamohini	Māya
Antari	Mohini
Kanyā	Manonmani
Kriyāśakti	Māsakti
Karani	Nārani
Karishani	Nisācari
Jñānasakti	Nīli
Tripura Bhairavi	Navasakti
Tatvanāyaki	Vairavi
Tripurasundari	Varāhamukhi
Suddhā	Vaikhari
Suhodayā	Vaindhavi
Sindhuraparipurā	Parābindu
Sāmbavi	Parāśakti
Yogini	Parāvidyā and
	Omkāri.

Vāmācāra Condemned

Tirumūlar strongly denounces the eating of meat, drinks, lust, lying, murder, etc.¹ Obviously in this text, madhu and māmsa were not approved. Mūlar also strongly condemns cohabitation with others wife.² He also denounces those who advocates sexual union as a source of emancipation. Mūlar advocates Vedic yagñas of saumya order and at the same time recommends, like the Vedantins, the discarding of Karma and Niyama.

Tirumūlar also squarely condemns Vāmāchāra. The Vāmins are said to waste their life in drinking liquor and sexual indulgence. He also refers to those who drink intoxicants, to attain Śakti.³

Fourth Tantra—A Śākta Section

The fourth Tantra of Tirumandiram is the most important and is considered the central teaching of the whole text. It carries 535 verses in thirteen chapters viz.,

- | | |
|-----------------------------|------------------------------------|
| 1. Ajapā | 8. Ādhāra Ādhēya |
| 2. Tiru Ambala Cakra | 9. Eroli Cakra |
| 3. Arcchana | 10. Bhairava Cakra |
| 4. Tripurā Cakra | 11. Sāmbavi maṇḍala Cakra |
| 5. Navakuṇḍa | 12. Bhuvanāpatī Cakra , and |
| 6. Bhairavi mantra | 13. Navākshari Cakra . |
| 7. Pūrṇa Śakti | |

Barring the first four chapters, in all the others, the various aspects of Śākta Tantra namely the mantra, yantra, upāsana, māyā, its various forms and the ultimate, supremacy of Śakti are detailed. A careful study of this portion would reveal that this part is a comprehensive treatise on Tantra Sāstrā of the Śāktas. Here Śakti is conceived as the Supreme Goddess (Parā devatā). The cakra in the human body, the Kuṇḍalini Śakti, the mode of awakening her, the various yantras, syllables connected with the appropriate mantras, the nyāsas, the mudras, etc., are discussed in such detail that we begin to feel that we are dealing with a purely Śākta Tantra in excellent Tamil.

That the cakras (mystic-diagrams) play a vital role in the Śākta cult is well-known. In the fourth Tantra alone, as many as seven chakras are discussed in different chapters under the heading :

Tiru Ambala Cakram, Tripurā Cakra, Eroli Cakra, Sāmbavi maṇḍala Cakra, Bhairava Cakra, Bhuvanāpatī Cakra and Navākshari Cakra.

Besides the above Bhairavi mantra, Pūrṇa Śakti and Ādhāra Ādhēya also emphasise the Śākta cult.

1. Tirumandiram, I. 199.

2. Ibid., I. 201.

3. Ibid., I. 332.

Tripurā Cakra

The Dēvi is called Tripurā since she is the presiding deity of the cakra of three kandas. Mahāmāyā, Suddhamāyā, Kutilā, Bindu and Kundali are synonyms. Asuddhamāyā is also called Adhomāyā or Mohinimāyā. Pranava is the body and grace of Tripurā. The six mantras Namaḥ, Vashaḥ, Vaushaḥ, Swāhā, Swadhā and Humpaḥ are the effects of Pranava. Tripurā is Mahāmāyā, Māyā, Vaindavā, Vaikarī, Pranava, the six mantra and Jñānasakti. She is also beyond all these.¹

The following are her other forms. Tripurā, Sundari, Antarī, Paripurā, Nārani, Dēvi of varied colours, Iśi and Manōnmani. Assuming various forms appropriate to the Gods, Tripurā bestows grace. Tripurā assumes three forms suited to the three worlds. She bestows knowledge, enjoyment and Liberation jñāna, bhōga and moksha as Saraswatī, Lakshmi and Śivā. She is white, red and golden in colour and combines in one form all the three aspects.² (That the Parāsakti combines in herself the aspect of Durgā, Lakshmi and Saraswatī is wellknown).

Tripurā bestows Nāda and Nādānta; She creates the universe as Parābindu; as Parā, Abhirāmi and Agocari, she bestows grace and Jñāna.³ The Dēvi wears anklets (nūpura) on her legs, red silk as garment and Kundala in her ears. Her breasts are covered by a breast band. As Parāsakti holds sugarcane bow, flower arrows, ankuśa and pāśa (This is generally considered the iconographic description of Rājarājeśvarī), wears kaṇḍika as a hāra around her neck, a jaṭāmakuṭa with the crescent moon. Her eyes (obviously ball-like) are topped by brows resembling a curved bow. She is also called Caṇḍikā, with heavy breasts, She is Māyā, Umā, Śakti, Māparā and Anōraṇi. There is no god who doesn't adore her, and She is the ultimate penance of all. Brahmā, Vishnu, Rudra, Mahēśa and Sadāśiva cannot function without her. She is Iccā, Jñāna, Kriyā and Ānanda Śaktis. Wherever there is Śiva, there she resides as Mahādēvi. She is also Dharā Śakti (obvious identification with Vasundhara). As Parāsakti she has in her half, Bhogasakti. She is also the deity of Vidyā (Śrī Vidyā).⁴ She has ten faces (the 8 directions and the upper and lower regions). She is Manonmani Mangali and the goddess of dance.⁵

There is an interesting manifestation often referred to in this text. The Ardhanārī form of Śiva, assumes a puzzling posture, when the Supreme principle is conceived of as Dēvi; Ardhanārī, has one half male and the other half as female. But when the whole is considered a feminine principle, the Śaktas speak of the form as a female uniting with a female. This concept is repeated in Tirumandiram. The Dēvi who stands united with the Umādēvi, will bestow moksha.⁶ The supreme realisation is called Śivagati and

1. Tirumandiram, iv. 1045.

2. Ibid., iv. 1047.

3. Ibid., iv. 1048.

4. Ibid., iv. 1059.

5. Ibid., iv. 1061.

6. Ibid., iv. 1063.

that is bestowed by Śakti who is also called Ānandasundari. Parāsakti is the body and soul of Śiva (some take it that she is the body and soul of individual self). She bears manuscript on her hand (an obvious identification with Sarasvati). In this aspect she is Manonmani. She has three eyes, and is white in colour. Her seat is white lotus. She is fond of singing Tirumarai, meaning Vedas.¹

She is Rājarājesvari, weilding pāśa, ankuśa and sugarcane bow.² She bears Varāha mukha and pestle and plough in her hand.³

The Dēvi, who is the embodiment of praṇava, is green in colour; She creates Brahmā, Vishnu, Śiva, Īśa and Sadāsiva and resides in the sound Hrim.⁴ She is the Tatparā, the Supreme being.⁵

Thus in the chapter on Tripurā cakra, Tripura Bhairavi is considered the Parāsakti, the primordial Being who creates this universe, and is the creator of the five Lords Brahma, Vishnu, Śiva, Īśa and Sadāsiva. She is Mahālakshmi, Mahāsarasvati, and Mahādevi in one form. Hers are icchā, jñāna, kriyā and Ānanda Śakti. She is the embodiment of Śrīvidyā. She is Rājarājesvari, Vārāhi and Chāmuṇḍa. The identification of this Tripurā with Cāmuṇḍa having curving eyebrows, manifesting anger, and hairs moving up like the flames of fire is clearly the Tantric Bhāvana. Her identification with Vārāhi, holding pestle and plough is also a point worthy of note. She manifests as the sixteen Kalas and is the ultimate Supreme taught by Vedas and other sacred texts. She is also the ultimate support, Ādhāra of the realised souls. She is Nāda as well as Nādānta. If the name of Parāsakti is meditated in the lotus seat of heart, the illuminating light will begin to brighten the soul.

Thus this whole chapter is in praise of Tripura-Bhairavi cult.

Bhairavi Mantra

The sixth chapter is captioned Bhairavi mantra, which deals with Supreme Bhairavi, Her manifestations as Manonmani, Kālī and Nārāyani, the path of internal meditation, antaryāga, the process of controlling breath, the nyāsas to be adopted and the mudras (the signs of hands) to be shown and her different manifestations are detailed in fifty verses.

Kālī—She wears śūla, kapāla, nāgapāśa and ankuśa in her arms and is a part of Śiva (On this description She is Kālī). The Dēvi, red like Agni in colour, wears Sūrya and Candra as her eyes and Kuṇḍala earrings.⁶

Nārāyani—As Nārāyani she carries sankha and cakra in her hands and wears śilambu in her legs.

1. Tirumandiram, iv. 1066-67.

2. Ibid., iv. 1068.

3. Ibid., iv. 1072.

4. Ibid., iv. 1073.

5. Ibid., iv. 1074.

6. Ibid., iv. 1083.

The Dēvi as Mahāsakti, manifests in the heart of the devotee as the beginning, middle and end of life. The heart of the devotee is equated to lotus in many verses. But in one verse it is conceived as a kalāṣa. She is adored by the eight kanyas and sixty four women (Yoginis). To the worshippers of Tripurā with Tripurāmantra she manifests as Dakshināmūrthi, the teacher of knowledge¹. Manifesting as a resplendent light like a full moon, She adopts the Vedic path and bestows grace. The Śūla offers protection to the Souls when the individual meditates on her in his hṛdaya kamala. She appears in breath, inhalation, exhalation and vitariha Puraka, rēcaka and prāṇa as Nārāyaṇi which is the end of Vedas and Vedantas².

This chapter also deals with the worshipping Śakti through the process of meditation which is called antaryāga of the eight fold yogic aṣṭāṅgayōga path.³ After giving the process of Karanyāsa it deals with the meditation of the nine Śaktis, beginning with Vāma and ending with Manonmani, each mediated in their respective vital centres ādhāra sthānas, the last one being adored at the head in the dvādasānta.⁴ In this process the Dēvi like a creeper emanates from the mūlādhāra centre, like an illuminating light and slowly reaches the sahasrāra centre also called matimaṇḍala and returns with the nectar⁵. In this aspect she resembles the great fire emanating from the sacrificial altar.

The chapter also deals with anganyāsa (assigning the various limbs of body with the mantras). Sikhā, Kavaca and Astra mantras are to be recited while doing the anganyāsa and the Supreme is invoked with various hand signs, like netra, sūla and yoni mudras.

The triple gunas (satva, rājas and tamas) of the devotees are subdued and Dēvi bestows grace as Bhairavi, Nīlī and Nisācarī.

After dealing this process of antaryāga, Thirumūlar enters into the realm of poetic ecstasy, the thrill of joy, he himself has experienced. He says the Vedas, the world of sentient and non-sentient beings, the five elements and the four directions are all nothing but the manifestation of this Universal Energy, who is the light of lights and the illuminating power of the individual.⁶ She is the body and soul of Isa as Ādi Bhairavi.⁷ She is the most beautiful embodiment of the very ambrosia, Amṛtānandasundarī, who has created the sun, moon and fire.⁸ She resides in the heart of those who are capable of listening to the divine sound of the anklet. She is also called the Goddess Kumārī, as Kanyā (the Goddess of the southern extreme).

1. Tirumandiram, iv. 1079.

2. Ibid., iv. 1088.

3. Ibid., iv. 1090.

4. Ibid., iv. 1090.

5. Ibid., iv. 1091.

6. Ibid., iv. 1098.

7. Ibid., iv. 1099.

8. Ibid., iv. 1102.

Pūrṇa Śakti

The seventh chapter of the fourth Tantra is captioned Pūrṇa Śakti, the comprehensive energy, the Dēvi in her full aspect. She protects the soul in times of suffering while Śiva in times of pleasure. Śiva and Śakti are the real parents of the universe. As Yoga Śakti, Devi will help the individual to cross the māyā alias bindu and Nāda. She is Yoga Śakti, as the resplendent piṭha, facing South, like Dakshinamūrti. She resides as Yoga Śakti in the middle of naval.¹

Thirumūlar says the Dēvi is Srīvidyā. Sri Cakra consists of nine triangles. When the Vedic mantra, Rudram is recited, She manifests herself with three eyes and holding gada and abhaya mudra (Rudra yāmala). It is interesting to mention here that the temple of Kāmākshī at Kanchipuram is called Nābhī sthāna and a piṭha has been installed in the antarāla as yonipiṭha. In the centre of the piṭha which is in the form of Yoni, there is Sri Cakra drawn. The worship in the temple is performed, according to Vedic tradition (not Āgamic tradition). It only suggests the prominent role of Rudram as mentioned in this text.

The Vaiṅkari vāk emanates as nāda from bindu and rising as an illuminating light reaches the tongue. The centre between the eyebrows is the place where the Śakti manifests herself as pure knowledge and in the further regions as pure experience. By meditating upon her as a Bālā, a young girl, one would himself become a youth. In another interesting statement the text, says one would become a Dēvi himself by meditating upon her. This is again the highest concept of the Śaktas.

The Paraśiva does the panca krītya act, in association with Iccā, Kriyā and Jñāna śaktis. Śiva and Śakti are united as flower and its fragrance, Śakti manifests as the syllables, beginning with 'A' and ending with 'ksha'. Those who visualise the Lord in Matimāṇḍala are Haṭayōgins. The Śakti resides in 224 Bhuvanas. The world is protected by Navasakti. The Dēvi in association with Śiva teaches supreme knowledge. Parāśakti appears as Virāṭ svarūpi, wearing silk and skin, traverses the universe with her feet. She wears Candra, Sūrya and Agni as ornaments.

In this chapter we have an interesting reference. The Dēvi is said to delight in sexual union. Her liking for maithuna is pointedly mentioned in its esoteric sense, which is important to show, that though the echoes of Vāmācāra are seen yet it is the sublime Dakshinācāra that dominates the work.

இன்பக்கலவி இனிதுறை கையன்²

Inbak Kalavi Inidurai Taiyal.

Ādhāra Ādheya

The eighth chapter deals with the container and the content. Śakti is the Ādhāra of Śiva. For the happiness of the world Śiva lived as Bhogadeva united with the Śakti.

1. Tirumandirum, iv. 1112.

2. Ibid., iv. 1127.

(Tantra is a Bhoga mārga). The place where Śakti as Kanyā manifests herself is red in colour. She resides in the head (Śiras) with sixteen kalas. Śakti is adored by Yāmala¹ Āgama. Before the creation of this universe, Śakti remained united with Śiva as Parāśakti. Śakti and Śiva resemble sexual union and its delight. Yoga Śakti is represented in pītha, and faces south (as Dakshināmūrti). Yoga Śakti is in the middle of the naval (Nābhi) and has her feet in the North.² She is in the form of Sri Vidya Sri Cakra which consists of nine triangles. When the Rudra hymn is uttered she manifests herself with three eyes, gada and abhaya mudra. Vaikarivāk, emanates as nāda from bindu, and rising as a resplendent light, comes through the tongue. From Mūlādhāra to Visuddhi sthāna, Śakti manifests herself as knowledge (jñāna), and above that as experience. Those who meditate upon Dēvi, become Dēvi themselves. One will attain Samādhi when meditating on undivided Śiva and Śakti. Śiva's enjoyment with Śakti is Māyā. The virgin remained united with her lover. (கலந்து நின்றுள் கன்னி தன் னாதலனே) Śiva is the support of Śakti and Śakti is the support of Śiva. They remain as ādḥāra and ādheya to each other.

Erolī Cakra

The next chapter deals with the cakra in the form of resplendent light moving upwards. The letters 'a', 'u' and 'ma' (of Aum). Nāda and Bindu, and 'Si' are Sivāksharas. 'Va' is Śakti akshara. The 16 letters 'a' to 'ah' and the two letters 'ha' and 'ksha' making a total of 18, reside in the Visuddhi and Ājñā cakras. Śiva passing these cakras and residing in candramaṇḍala is the kāladevata. He himself manifests as 360 days, Pakshas, Rtus, months and days. The twelve rāsis are divided into 3 parts. Taurus, leo, gemini and capricorn form Mesha Vīthi, Pices; Aries, Virgo and Libra, form Rshba vīthi, Sagittarius and Scarpio form the gemini path. One should meditate on the six ādḥāras and the twelve rāsis. This is called Rāsi cakra. By the energy of Śakti, the five elements appeared as light. They mingled into one great illumination. From these emanated the universe. The soul reside in this universe. The world is the effect of Bindu.

When Bindu and Nāda coalesce, in equal proportion, they form the seed of this material universe. When the proportion of the Bindu is reduced and Nāda increased to eight times, it is mantra bija. Two mantra bijas appear from Nāda. When Bija and Nāda join, bija enlarges into bindu. Bindu is the cause of all things. It is the energy of the lotus feet of the Lord.

The words Bindu and Nāda constitute the cakra. There is no use of merely uttering the mantras and drawing the diagram. The result can be obtained by meditating upon pranava in the inner soul. The mantra arising from the cakra, enlarges into Dambana, Mōhana, Uccāṭana, Vidvēshana, Mārana and Vasya. The Erolī cakra and its mantra if used for (Kāmya) material desires will not be effective.

1. Tirumandiram, iv. 1169.

2. Ibid., iv. 1172,

Bhairava Cakra

The next chapter is captioned Bhairava cakra. It is a short chapter, dealing with the greatness of Ādi Bhairava, and His cakra, the worship of which would destroy the opponents. Most of the commentators take the opponents as real enemies of the individual and suggest that this is intended for those who want to destroy their enemies. It is also possible to interpret this chapter in its esoteric sense in conformity with the general tune of this text. The enemies referred to are one's own senses which are the obstacles to the realisation of the Supreme. This chapter is also interesting from another angle. It gives the iconographic description of Ādi Bhairava as having six hands and holds Sūla, Kapāla, Damaruka, pāsa, head and sword. He is red in colour. Those desiring victory over enemies, should worship Bhairava with liquor, Madhu and Sāndhu, Jawādu and Punugu nei (ghee). The cakra consists of six and six—36 squares. The dead body of the opponents can be tossed up as a ball when Bairava drinks the life of the opponent. It is interesting to see that Bhairava is given a prominent position in this section. Secondly his invocation is intimately connected with war. Thirdly the offer of madhu (liquor) is also advocated, though probably in its finer sense as honey.

Sāmbhavi Maṇḍali Cakra

Another short chapter details the drawing of the cakra and the adoration of Sāmbhavi. The cakra consists of $8 \times 8 = 64$ squares in which four lingas are drawn. The five sacred letters Pancāksharas are meditated upon. Any one can meditate upon this Sāmbhavi cakra and Pancākshara, a universal approach, without caste, creed or sex). It may be mentioned that the worshippers of the Dēvi are said to take Sāmbavi Dīkshā, in other works. Another point of interest is that this cakra is called Nāḍari Maṇḍala, is well known to the people. Since all people could worship this aspect, this cakra seems to be called popular Maṇḍala. Everything in the universe, the object we see, the God we adore, the temple we revere, the body, feelings, sleep etc. are all the same Śakti. The Dēvi is also called Kāmukā. (It is of interest to mention that the Amman shrines in Tamil Nad are called Kamakōṭṭam).

Bhuvanāpatī Cakra

The five letters from 'ka' are golden in colour. The six letters from 'ha' are red in colour. The four letters from 'ca' are pure white in colour. The Parāśakti (the anga of Īśā) manifests as eight Śaktis, as Parāśakti, Ādi Śakti, Bindu Śakti, Manonmani, Maheśvari, Umā, Lakshmi and Saraswati. These eight forms of Śakti, following the eight yogas, unite with Nādānta. The form of Yantra is then detailed. This Yantra was probably held superior to others and was called Yantra rāja the emperor among mystical diagrams.

The invocation, establishing the vital breadth and meditation, Āvāhana, Prāna pratishṭā and dhyāna are prescribed in her worship. The Dēvi is said to be red in colour, wearing a red silk. She holds Ankusa, Pāsa and Abhaya and wears gem set ornaments. She is offered milk and the mantra Nāradāya Svāha is uttered in all the four directions. Then udvāsana is done and the left over (sesha) is partaken.¹

Navākshari Cakra

The 13th chapter of the fourth Tantra is called Navākshari (nine syllables). This chapter may be called a chapter on mantra Sādhana. The nine sacred syllables as given in this chapter are 'Chaum', 'Aum', 'Haum', 'Am', Krim, Aim, Rim and Srim. Each of these syllables are said to contain nine syllables, the combination making a total of 81 syllables. By the combination of various syllables, different Saktis are propitiated and their grace attained. The manifestations of these Śaktis, and their dhyānaslokas are given in this chapter which is the last of the fourth Tantra (section) in this text. Thus it is essentially a mantra sādhana.

Before discussing the text it is pertinent to note what Sir John Woodroffe has to say on the Śākta aspect of the mantra sādhana. "A mantra is like everything else, Śakti. Each mantra is the Embodiment of a particular form of consciousness of Śakti. This is the Mantra Śakti. Consciousness of Śakti also exists in the form of the Sādhaka. The object then is to unite these two when thought is not only in the outer husk but is vitalised by will, knowledge and action through its conscious centre in union with that the mantra. The latter is Devata or a particular manifestation of Śakti; and the Sādhaka who identifies himself with the Śakti.

As the Vāmas are Śiva Śakti concentration on them draws the mind towards and then unifies it with the Devata which is one with the Mantra. The Devata of the Mantra, is only the creative Śakti assuming that particular form. As already stated, Devata may be realised in any object not merely in mantras, yantras, Ghatas, Pratimas or other ritual objects of worship. The same power which manifests to the ear in the mantra is represented in the lines and curves of the yantra which the Kulavali Tantra says, is the body of the Devata.

The Devata is thus the graphic symbol of the Śakti, indicated by the Mantra, with which identification takes place. As in Kundalini yoga so also here the identification of the sādhanaka with different mantras gives rise to various Vibhūtis or powers; for each grouping of the letters represents a new combination of Matuka Śakti. It is the eternal Śakti who is the life of the Mantra. Therefore siddhi in Mantra Sādhana is the union of the Sādhaka's Śakti with the Mantra Śakti; the identification of the Sādhaka with the Mantra is the identification of the knower, knowing and known or Sādhaka, Mantra and Devata. Then the Mantra works.²

What is dealt with in the chapter on Navākshari cakra of the Thirumandiram is essentially the same as discussed by Woodroffe above. Thus it is evident, this chapter is truly a Śākta work. Thirumular says that he is describing the circle of Navākshari (nine syllables) each having nine aksharas making a total of eighty one and this circle begins with 'Klim' and ends with 'Caum'. This is clearly a subjective recitation (ullemum) which will confer navāksharī Śakti. It will bestow knowledge, education and manifest itself as a luminary. The cakra is to be made of silver, gold or copper and should be meditated upon. The Śakti should be worshipped with sambha paddy and arha grass reciting the mantras beginning with Srim and ending with Klim. She is Dharma devata. Kāmākshi of Kanchi worshipped in Sri cakra is called Dharmadevata. This Dēvi is black and will bestow all auspicious things on earth and conquest of death.

1. Sakti and Sakta by Sir. John Woodroffe, P. 509-510.

2. Ibid., P. 511-513.

As mentioned earlier the text deals with the worship of various cakras and mantras and in that sense is a compendium of Sākta yantrōpāsana. A second cakra is dealt with then in which the mantras beginning with 'Hrim' and ending with 'Srim' are to be invoked and worshipped by meditation. The worship of this is intended to draw people towards the worshipper. So this may be considered a Vasikarana cakra. This Dēvi is the Parā, the Goddess of all the eight quarters.

Another cakra, beginning with 'Aim' and ending with 'Rim' will bestow knowledge of Vedas, Āgamas and all other desired sciences. This is also considered the knowledge of the cosmic dance. This is recommended for those afflicted with mental agonies as it would remove all such afflictions. The meditation on this chakra is also said bestow golden colour to the devotee. Another chakra begins with 'Haum' and ends with 'Krim' and the presiding deity is called Sadāsiva Nāyaki, who is Manōmani. Another cakra is dedicated to Amudēsvarī and is to be adored with the bijas 'Lam' to 'Ham'. This chakra seems to be devoted to the control of breath (prāna). Another chakra beginning with 'Sam' and ending with 'Lam' is called the cakra of illuminating lamp (Vilakkoll cakra). The Dēvi of this cakra is the embodiment of knowledge. She pervades the supreme ākāśa, the space and dissolves all that has come into existence. In this cakra, Dēvi, the consort of the Lord of 'A' is invoked. She is identified as Nāvukkarasi (Vākdevī). She is the presiding deity of words and their meanings and knowledge (Kalvikkarasi).

The next cakra begins with 'Kaum' and ends with 'Aim'. In this cakra, the Dēvi manifests as the embodiment of Tattvas (Tattvanāyaki) and will remove lust, anger and the unending evil of karma. She witnessed the dance of the cosmic dancer, and is the Mother of this universe.

The next cakra is in praise of *Parāsakti*¹ as the virgin, dwelling in forest (Aranyavāsini—Kānattu kanni kalanda parā sakti). The bijaksharas begin with 'Krim' and ends in 'Kaum'. The worship of this deity will bring rain and prosperity.

The next cakra, is discussed in detail. Even the method of drawing this cakra is given. It is called the Svāyambu cakra (self manifesting cakra). It consists of 9×9=81 squares. The circles in this cakra are to be gold in colour, the line in yellow colour and the letters in green colour. After drawing this diagram, special oblations should be performed in sacrificial altar with ghee and Avis. Nine objects that give fragrance are to be placed; they are sandal, Kumkumam, Kastūri, red smandal paste, Javvādu, Punugu, Paccaikarpūram, Gorocanai and Pani nlr.

1. Tirumandiram, iv. 1344.

Nine Śaktis

After giving these nine cakras, the chapter gives the iconographic description of nine Śaktis and the result that would be obtained by worshipping them. However the name of the individual Śakti's are not given.

The Dēvi has six arms holding Parasu, Sūla, Ankusa, Pāsa, bow and arrow. The sacred syllable of this Dēvi is 'Klim' she is surrounded by 64 Śaktis and 64 kanyas, carrying bow and arrow in their two arms. This Dēvi is golden in colour and is the embodiment of mercy. The second aspect of Dēvi is that of Sri (Mahālakshmi). She has four hands and in both the upper arms holds lotus and the lower ones are held in abhaya and varada poses. She wears Kirtita makuta and on her legs silambu. She is surrounded by sixty Śaktis and sixty virgins, kanyas. They would be carrying flowers in their hands. The Dēvi of this manifestation is Dhanalakshmi.¹ The third aspect of Dēvi is also four armed holding pāsa, ankusa, jñānamudra and a parrot. Her syllable is 'Hrim'. She is surrounded by fifty six Śaktis and fifty six kanyas. This Dēvi helps in cutting asunder the bondage of the individual. The fourth manifestation is that of Saraswati. She is seated on a lotus and holds, abhaya, vyākhyānamudra, kundikā and akshamāla. She is surrounded by fifty two śaktis and fifty two kanyas. Another manifestation of the Dēvi shown with eight arms, holding flower, parrot, pasa, parasu, sword, sheild, bow and arrow, wears a garland of pearls and a breastband of coral beads. The Dēvi green in colour and wearing silken garment, is attended by 48 Śaktis and 48 kanyas who are holding their hands in protective poses. She is to be worshipped as Prāna Śakti. Another manifestation is shown with ten faces and twenty arms. The following are the weapons :

- | | |
|----------------------|------------------------|
| 1. Pāsa | 11. Ankuṣa |
| 2. Sūla | 12. Parrot |
| 3. Danḍa | 13. Bow |
| 4. Sudarvāḥ | 14. Flower |
| 5. Fire | 15. Pāśa (Nāga) |
| 6. Cakra | 16. Parasu |
| 7. Jñānamudra | 17. Sword |
| 8. Spear | 18. Shield |
| 9. Arrow | 19. Sankha |
| 10. Damaruka | 20. Kaṭaka |

She is also seated on a lotus and is surrounded by 44 Śakti and 44 kanyas. She seems to be Siddhidhātṛi bestowing siddhis like Animā. Some aspects of this Dēvi are interesting. She is ten faced and twenty armed. The weapons in her arms are also detailed. She is indeed a unique conception rarely seen in the śilpa sāstras.

1. Tirumandiram, rv. 1379.

The next representation discussed is Sadāsivanāyaki, (Manonmani) with five heads and ten arms, holding bell, sūla, kapāla, parrot, snake, parasu, sword, ball, flower and damaruka. She is surrounded by 46 śaktis and 46 kanyas. She manifests in the Kāsi cakra. The meditation of this Dēvi will lead to the realisation of the Śiva-pancākshara 'Sivāyanama'. Another manifestation is called Amrtakalā. She is two armed, holding amṛta kalasa in her arm. She is attended by 36 Śaktis and 36 kanyas. She seems to be the Mohini and is therefore called Nārāyanasamā. The ninth aspect discussed is the Omkārasvarūpi two armed, slender like a creeper and the very embodiment of feminine beauty. She is the daughter of Girindra, and is attended by 32 Śaktis and 32 kanyas.

Having described these nine aksharas, nine cakras and Śaktis, the text says that there is nothing that one cannot obtain by adoring this Dēvi. In fact the author extols the greatness of Śiva as a grhasta, united with Dēvi and the allusions are sufficient enough to show, that all people particularly grahastas can obtain the supreme bliss in this path. As discussed in other parts of this work, the worship of Śakti and Śiva, did not emphasise renunciation as a sole path to realisation. Again and again they categorically assured the householder that the path of realisation is open to him.

A careful analysis of this fourth section of Thirumandiram, clearly shows that it is a full Tantra sāstra of the Śakta cult. Various manifestations of the Dēvi are dealt with, including the iconographic features, respective sacred syllables, the mystical diagrams (cakras), and even the homa associated with it etc. We have also shown that even among the Śakta school, different Śaktis are prescribed for different purposes.

Besides this section, Thirumūlar gives the Śakta concept of six cakras in the body, the nāda and bindu concepts, Kuṇḍalinī Śakti remaining as a coiled serpent, the ability to rise this power which will pierce the psychic centres and reach the sahasrāra, Parāśakti being the cause of the entire universe etc., in many other verses, which it is needless to discuss in detail. We will cite only a few instances. In the seventh section we have time and again the concept of Śakti figuring. The first appearance caused in the world by Sadāsiva is Śakti. All the forms of the universe are Śakti. All the gunas of the world are Śakti. Bhoga, Moksha, Buddhi, Siddhi, the total of 36 tattvas etc., are also Sadāsiva.¹ (1713-1714).

Brahma, Vishṇu, Rudra, Isā and the five faced Sadāsiva, Nāda and Bindu, Ādhārasakti and the Parasiva are commonly called Sadāsiva.² Śakti is the earth, while Sadāsiva is the universe. Śakti and Śiva constitute the mobile and immobile objects. Śakti is with form and Śiva is formless. Śakti and Śiva constitute the 36 Tattvas. Sadāsiva with five heads and ten arms is invoked with five angamantras; they are hrdaya (heart), siram (head), sikhā tuft. Kavaca (sheath) and netra (eye) mantras. In each we have the Śakti manifesting in different forms. In hrdaya mantra she manifests as Jñānasakti; in Siromantra, she is Parāśakti; in sikhā, she is Ādi Śakti and in the sheath she is Iccā

1. Tirumandiram, vii. 1713-14.

2. Ibid., vii. 1731.

and in Netrā, she manifests as kriyā Śakti.¹ The Piṭha of linga is music and Omkāra.² Bindu and Nāda constitute the Linga in which Bindu is the piṭha and Nāda is the linga. The two united are to be adored as Ādhāra devas.³ Śakti in the piṭha is Ātma Śakti; in the kaṇṭa portion is Vidyā Śakti and the linga portion is Sivatattva and the Śakti that manifests in the whole, is called Sadāsiva. The creation of the universe, the individual soul made to go through the experience of Māyā and Karma and bestowal of final emancipation are all the sports Śiva and Śakti.

The age of the work

The date of this work is essential for the study of Sakta cult in India as such. The traditional accounts that Thirumular lived in 6000 B.C. and that he lived for 3000 years, composing one verse each year are to be left to the realm of myths. The highly advanced concepts of Śakta and Saiva faith expressed in this work; the references to Chidambaram and the colloquial expressions found abundantly in this work are considered by some scholars as a pointer to a late date for this work. We do not think that it is possible to fix the date of this valuable work with any certainty, but rest satisfied with indicating the possibilities.

That the work seems to be earlier than 12th century A.D. appears to be certain, for Sekkilār, the author of the Periyapurānam, who adorned the Chola court, refers to the 3000 verses composed by Thirumūlar besides giving his life history. Sekkilār based his work on the Thirṭhondar antāti by Nambi Āṇḍar Nambi and Thiruttondatṭhai of Sundaramurti. Nambi Āṇḍar Nambi is assigned to the 11th century A.D. He refers to Thirumūlan as a native of Sattanur and belonging to a family of Cowherds. He also says that Mūlan sang the essence of Vedas in pure Tamil.

குடிமன்னு சாத்தனூர்க் கோக்குல மேய்ப்போன் குரம்பு புக்கு
முடிமன்னு கனற் பிறையானன் தன்னை முழுத்தமிழால்
படிமன்னு வேதத்தின் சொற்படியே பரவிட்டென்றுச்சி
அடிமன்ன வைத்த பிரான் மூலனாகின்ற அங்காளனே.

Nambi Āṇḍar Nambi refers also to the legend that Mūlan entered the body of the Cowherd. This would take the work earlier than 11th century. As has been mentioned above, Nambi Āṇḍar Nambi himself elaborated the list of saints given by Sundaramurti. Sundaramurti, who is assigned to 8th century A.D., refers to Thirumūlan as one of the saints. He does not give any exploits of Thirumūlan nor does he refer to the composition of this work. Some scholars try to argue that there was no doubt a saint, Thirumūlan, but the author of this Thirumandiram must be a later saint, the identity being only in their names. The reasons for this view are the highly developed philosophic contents and terminology. However, it is seen that Nambi Āṇḍar Nambi who elaborated Sundaramurti's work has to the extent possible preserved the legends

1. Tirumandiram, vii, 1744.

2. Ibid., vii, 1752.

3. Ibid., vii, 1757.

connected with the life of other saints. There is no reason to believe that a different legend is given only with reference to Mūlan, though the possibility of some mixing up in the intervening period cannot be completely ruled out. That would place Mūlan, earlier than 8th century A.D. The great Saivite saints Appar and Sambandar who lived in 7th century A.D. have no reference to Thirumūlan. The absence of reference is though not an argument, for they do not refer to many other saints mentioned by Sundaramurti, yet we may hold that the work of Mūlan has not attained sufficient popularity to have attracted their attention. In all probability Mūlan himself wrote his work sometime in 7th century A.D.

This dating would of course give raise to further problems which need an independent enquiry. For example whether the twenty eight Āgamas and their upāgamas were well codified before this period? Whether the Rudra Yāmala has developed to the extent found in this text? Whether Nātha cult to whom we assign Mūlan, has developed in Northern India before the 8th century A.D., to such great heights? What was the role of Benaras as a centre of Saiva learning before the 8th century A.D. and what was its relation with the Vāma school of Bengal? Whether in Benaras itself, the Vāma school was squarely denounced as has been done by Thirumūlar? The constant wave of ideas emanating and spreading towards the south and the impact of the Tamil scholars visiting Benaras and leaving their imprint on the developing ideas there, also deserve a special study.

We would only say that the Thirumandiram cannot possibly be dated later than 8th century A.D. and for the study of Tantric cult it is one of the ancient works in the whole of India and needs greater attention than it has received so far.

THIRUPPUGAL

*Thiruppugal*¹

One of the greatest figures of late medieaval period (14) who revived the Bhakti movements, by his excellant poems was Arunagirinatha. Arunagiri was a great bhakta of Subrahmanya and has composed hundreds of poems on him. His poems are collected and are popularly called Thiruppugal. Besides Thiruppugal, Arunagiri has composed Kandar anubhuti and Kandar alamkāra, both one hundred verses each, on Lord Skandha. Besides a number of other poems are also assigned to him. His poem are sung reverentially by millions of devotees to this day. They are in excellent Tamil, with an admixture Sanskrit, and are known for their rhythm and deep meanings.

Life of Arunagiri

Arunagiri belonged to the family of Dindima family which received the patronage of the Vijayanagara rulers in later times. Arunagiri spent the major part of his life at Thiruvannamalai, a place known for its impressive hill and a great spiritual attraction.

1. 'Tiruppugal', Saiva Siddhanta Samajan, Ed.

The hill was called Arunagiri i.e. the red hill. Obviously the saint Arunagirinātha was named after this sacred hill.

According to tradition, saint Arunagirinātha came into conflict with one Sambandān, an influential person in the administration of Thiruvannamalai temple. Sambandān, is said to have been a Śakta, a Kāli upasaka, who schemed to do away with Arunagirinatha. Having failed in his attempt, he was converted says the tradition.

Arunagirinātha has two biographical references in his poems. In one he refers to a Prauḍadevarāya, a contemporary ruler and in another refers to one Somanāthadeva Matha. This Prauḍadevarāya has been taken to refer to the Vijayanagara ruler Devarāya and Arunagiri is assigned to the 15th century A.D.¹

Date of Arunagiri

I have discussed the date of Arunagiri in detail elsewhere.² An inscription from Thiruvannamalai temple where Arunagiri lived, helps us in fixing the date of Arunagirinātha. The inscription is dated in saka 1262 (A.D. 1340). The then ruler mentioned in the inscription is Hoysala Viravallāla III. The epigraph refers to a gift of land to some Brahmins by one Sambandān, a head of a matha at Thiruvannamalai. Among the signatories figure one Somanāthadeva and one Arunagirijiyār. Mention has already been made that Arunagirinātha came into conflict with Sambandān at Thiruvannamalai and he also refers to Somanātha. The contemporaneity of all the three persons, Arunagiri, Sambandān and Somanātha are established by this epigraph. A certain Arunagiri is said to have been born in A.D. 1300 according to a manuscript. In all probability Arunagiri the author of Thiruppugal was identical with this and lived in the 14th century.

Śakta leanings of Arunagiri

As mentioned earlier, all his poems are in praise of Subrahmanya, but he refers so frequently to various aspects of Śakti, that we are tempted to suggest that he was only following a modified form of Śakta tradition. The suffix nātha attached to his name seems to indicate that he belonged to a branch of the Nātha cult. It is not known whether this branch of the Nātha cult, had as its main deity, Kumāra Skanda. But Arunagirinātha made it an independent, powerful and at the sametime popular devotional movement in praise of Skanda with a strong base of Śakta tradition. It would therefore be interesting to outline briefly the Śakta cult as reflected in Arunagiri's poems.

The various forms of Śakti are mentioned by Arunagiri while praising Skanda as the child of this universal mother. In most of these instances, well known Śakta

1. 'History of Tamil Literature', 15th century, Madras, 1969, P. 6-40.

2. Arunagiri and Annāmalai Inscription by R. Nagaswamy; S.I.L., Vol. VIII, No. 80, P. 231-233.

names in Sanskrit are used freely. An example would suffice to show this trend.

Dhavalārūpa Sarasvatī Indira
Ratī Pulōmasa Kṛittikā Rambhaiyar
Samūha sevita Durgā Bhayankarī Bhuvanēsi
Sakalakārani Sakti Paramparī
Himayaparvatī Rudrī niranjanī
Samayanāyaki Nishkali Kundalī Emadāye
Sivai Manonmani chitsukhā sundarī
*Gaurī Vedavidakshinī Ambikai Tripural Yāmalai*¹

Devi is praised by her both benign and terrific aspects. She is praised as Ranabhairavi, Ranatungakālī, Cāmūṇḍī, Piḍārī, Kangālī, Kuṭilayoginī, Sankarī, Caṇḍikai Virabhadrakālī which clearly signify the Śākta traditions in full.

A list of select names of Dēvi, which are reflective of Śākta cult is given below :

Akilānda Nāyaki	Kanyā
Abhirāmi	Kāmakkottakulamayil
Ambikā	Kāmatantra lila lokinī
Āgamasundarī	Kāmi
Ādi Ambika	Kuṭilā
Ranasūlī	Kuṭilā yoginī
Onreṭṭu cakradalappen (the Dēvi of Aṣṭādala cakra).	Sankarī
Kapālī	Caṇḍikā
Kalyāṇī	Samaranilī
Gaurī	Nirguna
Sādhakī	Bhadrakālī
Sāmālakara Paramayoginī	Bhairavi
Syāmalā	Parāparī
Sivakāmasundarī	Paramayoginī
Sūlinī	Bhavānī
Tatpara	Manōnmani
Tripurā	Veda Tantri
Nādaṇḍī (Nādarupa)

These names are sufficient to show the height to which the Śākta concepts have permeated the Tamil country in the 14th century A.D.²

Śākta Concept

The following attributes of the Dēvi as mentioned in Thiruppugal also deserve notice. The Dēvi is the embodiment of the eight mūrtas (the eight elements), and is beyond the comprehension of all the Āgamas. She is the embodiment of the six sects (Ṣaṭ Samaya), and the giver of Kāmasukha. The individual souls will ultimately merge with the Dēvi. In order to protect the souls she took the form of Vishnu. She is Gayatri beyond verbal description. She floats as a child on waves of ocean (obvious reference to the Vaṭapatrasāyi Vishnu). She is the Kāma Tantra lila lokini. She came to Kanchipura on a bull. She resides in cakradala; She is praised by Sāmavēda; She is Jñānapūrani and Mantrarūpi; She is the giver of Purānas; She puts under her feet Muyalaka, and takes her residence in cakra (cakra pracanda sankari). She is Vārāhi; She studies Vamatantra (Vamatantra nūl āyvāl). She gives Parama Bhoga to those who drink Madhupāna. (Madhupānam Parukinar Paramapbhōga Mohini).¹

1. 'Arunagiri and Devi' by S.V. Seturaman, Madras, 1968, P. 337.

2. Ibid., P. 26-49.

The Dēvi is said to dance as Bhairavi to the left of dancing Śiva (a feature often noticed in sculptural representation). She is said to be the Goddess residing in the temple at Smaṣāna.

It is shown above that all the concepts of the Sakta cult, are fully developed and reflected in Arunagiri's hymns to Skandha. We have shown that by 12th century the Sakta tradition is beginning to emerge in the literature of the period, as reflected in Takkayagapparani and Kalingattupparani. This reaches its height in the 14th century with the advent of Arunagiri, and soon we begin to get hymns and works solely devoted to Dēvi cult. The popularity of Dēvi worship in Śiva temples is in no small measure to Arunagiri's work.

1. 'Arunagiri and Devi' by S.V. Seturaman, Madras, 1968, P. 84-95.

IV

TANTRISM IN TAMIL SASTRIC WORKS

JNĀNĀMIRTHAM

Jnānāmirtham,¹ by Vāgisa Paṇḍita is an interesting work on Saiva cannon, which was in probablity written in the middle of 12th century A.D.

Vāgisa

Vāgisa Paṇḍita, who originally was a resident of Kodambakkam, a part of the present Madras city learnt at the feet of a master Paramānanda Muni also called Arulnandi and then went to Thiruvorriyur (now a suburb of Madras) and became an exponent of Saiva doctrine.²

In the Śiva temple of Thiruvorriyur, a matha was established by a Caturānana Paṇḍita in the 10th century A.D., which became an important seat of learning. At the instance of one of the Caturānana Paṇḍitas, the present structure of the temple was rebuilt of stone by the Chola Emperor, Rājendra in 11th century.

Vāgisa a Somasiddhantin

An inscription in the Temple dated in the reign of the Chola ruler, Rājādhirāja II (circa A.D. 1175), gives an interesting information. During the Panguni festival in the temple, the emperor himself was present on the sixth day of the festival. The deity Paṇḍampakka dēva was taken out in procession and stationed under the Mahisa tree. At that time, Āluḍainambi Sripurāna was expounded. Along with the Chola ruler, Chaturānana Paṇḍita and Vāgisa Paṇḍita were present on that occasion. The signators to an endowment recorded in an inscription in the same temple, include Chaturana

1. 'Jnānāmirtham' with commentary, Ed. Avvai S. Duraiswamy Pillai, Annamalai University, 1954.
2. 'History of Tamil Literature' (Tamil) by M. Arunachalam, 12th Century, Madras, 1973, P. 725.

Pañḍita and Vāgisa Pañḍita, the exponent of Somasiddhanta.¹ We will discuss Sōmasiddhanta elsewhere, but suffice it to say that this Vāgisa Pañḍita is held identical with the author of Jnānāmirtam.

He is said to have later went to Thiruvāliswaram and became the head of the Gōlaki maṭha. Inscriptions in that temple, refer to his successors as belonging to the Santāna of the Jnānāmirtha Ācārya of Golaki maṭha. From the above identification we may conclude that Vāgisa was a follower of the Sōmasiddhānta school of which he became a great exponent. His title Pañḍita also suggests the same. We, therefore, conclude that this work Jnānāmirta is an exposition of the Sōmasiddhānta school and not the Saiva Siddhānta school. It is perhaps the reason why this good work has not been included among the 14 Saiva Siddhānta texts. In the succeeding paragraphs we may examine the concept of Śakti according to this text.

Eight Sections

The work has been divided into eight sections by later commentators under the following headings : (1) Samyak Jñāna, (2) Samyak darsana, (3) Pāsabandha, (4) Dēhāntara, (5) Pāsa anādi, (6) Pāsa cheda, (7) Patī Unmai, and (8) Pāsa mocana.

The invocatory verse is dedicated to Śiva as Ardhanārī. Śakti is said to be emerald-green in colour, and is grace incarnate. She is the very abode of dharma aravo! and her very personality is revealed in her captivating smile.

Ādināyaki

The work also has a verse dedicated to Saraswati, who is described as Ādināyaki, the primordial Goddess. She is seated on a white lotus, adored by pairs of Kinnaras, vipras and divine damsels. Her adorers renounced even svargabhoga and other pleasures like Kama sukha (eternal desires). She by her illuminating grace, dispels their ignorance and bestows bliss.

It is interesting to see Saraswati being praised as the Primordial Goddess, Ādināyaki, in a Saiva text. We have seen that Mahālakshmi, Mahādēvi and Mahā Sarasvati were considered the manifestations of the same Śakti, in Dēvi bhāgavata. This verse reflects that idea by the term Ādināyaki.

In the section on Patīniscaya, the greatness of Śiva is enunciated wherein he is called the Lord of Sri, Sarasvati and Kālī (vyāya mādhū) which again shows the dēvi bhāgavata cult of Mahā Kālī, Mahā Sārasvati and Mahā Lakshmi. Three māyās namely Suddhamāyā, Asuddhamāyā and Prakṛitimāyā are recognised. These are also called Bindu, Mohini and Man.

Sṛishṭi

By the Sankalpa of Śakti, inherent in Śiva, the universe comes into being in Bindu avasthā. Suddhamāyā is insentient; Sṛishṭi is of two kinds; Sankalpa Sṛishṭi

1. 'South Indian Inscriptions', Volume V.

and karana srishṭi. Parasiva activates bindu by his meare will (Sankalpa) and not by any seperate act. This is also given in Paushkara as शिव संकल्पमात्रे बिंदुसोमकरो मतः

न व्यापार विशेषेण येन अयं विकृतो भवेत्

Paramasiva in whom the merciful Śakti inheres, is the creator of this universe. He can be visualised only by knowledge. He resides in all perceptible objects but beyond perception. He is beyond forms and is not the direct agent of the five action but does the five acts through his Iccā Śakti. Śiva is nishkala, Sadāsiva is Nishkala sakala and Mahesvara is Sakala. Paramasiva, though creates the entire universe through his Śakti, is unaffected himself, like the sun which makes the lotus flowers to blossom but is unaffected by its action. It is only when the individual soul enters the body and enjoys the pains and pleasures, the mala will be removed and it is for this reason the inseperable eka sakti of Paramasiva, binds and releases the individual soul by her creation (405).

Śiva Śakti

Śiva Śakti, is unparalleled, self luminary; Omnipresent; by itself unaffected or unchanged, Nitya, not covered by any other object. It by itself has no likes or dislikes. This is the Svarupa lakshana of this Śakti (406). Śiva Śakti has two aspects Kriyā and Jnāna, through Jnāna Śakti it visualises and activates through kriya śakti.

Mahāmāya is the upādhāna cause of the five elements; She unites with the Bindu and remains in the pancakṛityas and is devoid of any other desire; without a beginning, middle or end, remains as illuminating light everywhere; without any binding remains as the very end of all padārthas culminating at the nāda.

Parasakti

The Parāsakti, in the company of Śiva, enters the Bindu alias Suddhamayā and by producing the four vāks (speeches) — vaikari, Madhyama, Baisantī and Sūkshma, actuates the Bindu at the time of creation.

Śakti, the aspect of Śiva is one and the same but by its varied functions it is called by various names. Kriya Śakti, without seperation from Śiva, though is without action, actuates the universe says the treatises. Kriya Śakti is a Jata, devoid of knowledge. It is the Jnāna Śakti of Śiva, that bestows bhoga and moksha to the individual soul, through Kriyā Śakti.

Śakti nipāta is another important concept of the Saiva school. This is explained in the following way. When suddenly a stone falls in the midst of people, they are shaken and hurriedly resort to safer places, so also at the appropriate time Śiva makes his Śakti fall on the individual soul, who attains the lotus feet of the jñānācharya realising the uselessness of the samsāra. By Śakti nipāta, the individual soul will get diksha.

THIRUVUNDIYĀR

The Author

The Tamil tradition has grouped fourteen Sastric texts in Tamil as representing the Saiva Siddhānta cannon among which Meikandadeva's Sivagnānabodham is considered the basic treatise of this school. Meikandadeva is assigned to 13th century A.D. However there are two works written earlier to this period which are also included among the fourteen texts and they are: (1) *Thiruvundiyaṛ*¹ by Thiruvīsalur Uyyavanda deva and the (2) Thirukkalirrupadiyaṛ by Thirukkadaṁṭṭu Uyyavandadeva. Recorded tradition assigns the composition of the works to Saka 1070 (A.D. 1148) and to Saka 1100 (A.D. 1178) respectively.²

Undiyaṛ

Undiyaṛ ('Thiru' is an auspicious prefix) consisting of 45 verses, in the poetic convention of a sport, recalling the flight of butterflies. The last verse of the composition gives the name of the author as Uyyavantān. It is placed at the head of the fourteen Siddhānta texts. It is so close to the Thirumandiram in its exposition and content, we are tempted to hold this as a text, belonging to Thirumandiram school, which we have identified with the Nātha school of the North. This is equally corroborated by the tradition which state Uyyavantadeva came originally from Northern India and after preaching this doctrine at Thiruvīsalur, attained salvation. If Thiruvīsalur Uyyavantadeva was really a northerner (which some scholars dispute) his mastery over Tamil language is remarkable which bespeaks of the missionary zeal of these great saints.

Since this is a short work, the references to Śakti cult are meagre. However, the author refers to Śiva as Ambikai bhāga.

The Doctrine

The Lord is akala but manifests himself as sakala for the benefit of the living beings. The ashtāṅga path, eight fold path, will lead to liberation³. By controlling the prāṇa and changing its directions one gets the ability to realise⁴. By raising Kundalini (called the lying old lady) one attains bliss⁵. A ginglyng sound of anklets, that would be heard will lead to the realisation of the Dancing God⁶. One is led to nirādhāra from ādhāra by following this path.⁷

1. Tiruvundiyaṛ—Meikāṇḍa Sāttiram, Published by Dharmapuram Mutt, 1942.

2. "History of Tamil Literature" (Tamil), 12th Century by M. Arunachalam, Madras, 1973, P. 714.

3. Thiruvundiyaṛ, v. 24.

4. Ibid., v. 22.

5. Ibid., v. 14.

6. Ibid., v. 17.

7. Ibid., v. 8.

In addition to the above concepts, Thiruvundiyār also refers to two important acts of the sādhaka. The first one relates to sexual union maithuna (siṛṇba) which itself would lead to great bliss.

பெற்ற சிற்றின்பமே பேரின்பமாய் அங்கே
முற்றவரும் பரிசுத்தி பற.

(வரிகள் : 33)

It also refers to drinking intoxicating liquors.

மாயக்கள்ளுண்டா ரென்றுத்தி பற.

However, the author mentions these two forms of observances in their esoteric sense and not in their ordinary sense. In fact, the author says that it is only the fools, who will take to these ordinary or lower course without realising their real esoteric meanings; for example drinking does not mean the drinking of liquor but the liquor of knowledge. He calls the followers of lower paths as dry human beings.

Another important aspect, is the reference to the supreme Lord as Nātha. The God, the ruler of our souls, is one (Eka) and many (aneka), who becomes Nātha. This reference to Nātha, would confirm our view that this work was also influenced by the Nātha tradition. Though we have references to Śakti and its worship, they are not of the Vāma but of the Dakshina school. However it is clear from this work that the Vāma school with an emphasis on maithuna and madhu was also known to the author who despised the practices.

THIRUKKALIṚUPPADIYĀR

The Author

*Thirukkalirruppaḍiyār*¹ by Uyyavandadeva of Thirukkaḍavūr, is the second Siddhānta work constituting the 14 works in Tamil. This work is almost an elaboration of Thiruvundiyār discussed earlier. The author of this work, Uyyavandadeva, is said to have been a disciple of one Āludaiyadeva who was himself a disciple of the author of Thiruvundiyār. The authors of bore the texts Thiruvundiyār and its elaboration Tirukalirruppaḍiyār, bore the same name Uyyavandadeva, the elder hailing from Thirūvisalūr and the younger from Thirukkaḍavūr. The teachings of the former was transmitted to the later, through a disciple. This tradition is based on one of the verses in *Thirukkalirruppaḍiyār*² (verse 95). The verse specifically states that the author of the Kalirruppaḍiyār was inspired by the Sivayōgi of Thiruvīsalur. Probably the author of Kalirruppaḍiyār was a direct disciple of Thiruvīsalur Uyyavandadeva. There is only 30 years between the composition of the first and the second work.

1. Tirukkalirruppaḍiyār—Meikāṇḍa Sattiram, Published by Dharmapuram Mutt, 1942.

2. Ibid., v. 5.

Whatever it may be, it is significant that the Untiyār was elaborated within 30 years by one of the disciples.

The Doctrine

As mentioned earlier, the Kalīrūppaḍiyār is only an elaboration of Untiyār, its outlook and concepts are identical. The following concepts of this work may be briefly mentioned.

“Śakti and Śiva known as Ammaiappar, are the parents of the Universe. Good Śivadharmā will lead one to Śivayoga which in turn will lead to Śiva Jñāna as a result of which the āṇava (ahamkāra) will be destroyed and Śiva will manifest himself. The five syllables, Pancākshara, will help one to realise Ammaiappa (Primordial parents). When external sounds are abandoned internal sounds of the anklet will be heard. The real knowledge is like the seed and the inherent sprout in it. Of all the Yogas nothing is superior to Śivayoga. All the other Yogas are only despicable yogas Avayoga.¹ For the Yogins, physical pleasures are real great bliss.² The Lord activates the universe through Śakti.³ The Lord is golden in colour, while Ambikā is red in colour. Whatever the colour taken by Śiva, the Lord also assumes the same colour.⁴ He unites with his consort and also becomes part of her and stands at the head of all with her and also resides in the Nāḍānta of the consort.⁵ I am a devotee of the Nāyaka (Śiva) Nāyaki and Nandi.⁶

The work consisting of 100 verses begins with Ammai (Universal motherhood) and emphasises the universal parantage of Śiva and Śakti. Thus it is essentially a Śaiva doctrine. However, foremost importance is given to Śakti, as Śiva functions only through her.

ŚIVA JÑĀNABODHAM

With the advent of Meykandadeva, the author of *Śiva Jñānabodha*⁷ in Tamil, we enter into a grand period of Śaiva doctrines. It is for the first time that Śaiva Siddhānta doctrine is reasoned out in terms of logic, and the existence of the Supreme Being, the individual souls, the bondage their interrelationship and the path of realisation are coherently established in the true sastric discipline. The exposition of Meykandadeva was so brilliant, that all those who succeeded him, refer to him as their Jñānaguru, and the Śaiva Siddhānta doctrine itself came to be called Meykaṇḍa Sāstra. Meykarda was followed by great exponents of his doctrine, the writings of whom now constitute the Meykaṇḍa Sāstra. All together 14 works have been included in this canon, which includes also the Thiruvuntiyār and Thirukkalīrūppaḍiyār which were composed earlier.

1. “Tirukkalīrūppaḍiyār”, Meikanda Sāttiram, Published by Dharmapuram Mutt, 1942, v. 74.

2. Ibid., v. 76.

3. Ibid., v. 78.

4. Ibid., v. 79.

5. Ibid., v. 80.

6. Ibid., v. 98.

7. Sivagñānabodham—Meikanda Sāttiram, Published by Dharmapuram Mutt, 1942.

Meykandār-Life

Meykardadeva was born of a Vellala family at Pennagadam in Tamilnadu and was brought up at his mother's place, Vennainallur and hence came to be called Vennainallur Meykandadeva. A certain Śakalāgama Pandita who was his family guru, became his disciple and assumed the name Arulnandi. Meykandar is said to have received initiation at the hands of one Paranjyoti Muni.

An inscription in the Śiva temple at Thiruvannamalai¹, dated in the reign of the Chola ruler, Rajaraja III (1232) refers to a Meykandadeva of Vennainallur who dug a tank, and erected a Śiva temple after his name. Scholars have identified this Meykandadeva with the author of the Śiva Jñānabodha.²

Śiva Jñānabodham-Tāmil

The Śiva Jñānabodha, consists of twelve sūtras in Tamil outlining the Śaiva doctrine. There is a Vṛtti on these sūtras, consisting of prose elucidation interspersed with some verses, also in Tamil cited as examples. The citations are in the form of Kārikas (Udahāraṇas). Thus we have Sūtras, Kārikas and Vṛtti, in the true sastric tradition. According to accepted traditions the Sūtras, Kārikas and Vṛttis were all written by the same author, Meykandadeva.

Śiva Jñānabodham-Sanskrit

There are also available, 12 sūtras called Śiva Jñānabodham, in sanskrit language. It is held by some that the Tamil work by Meykandadeva, was a translation into Tamil, of the Sanskrit work. The Sanskrit work has been commented upon by one Sadaśiva about A.D. 1500. A certain Śiva Jñanaswamy, who commented on Tamil Śiva Jñānabodham, in 18th century holds that the Tamil Śiva Jñānabodham was a translation of the Sanskrit text which forms a part of Rauravāgama. However this tradition is discounted by modern traditional scholars, who hold the Tamil work as an original writing for : (1) in the available manuscripts of Rauravāgama, these sūtras are not to be seen, and (2) the sūtras do not fit in with the general trend of the Āgamas. As such it is held that the two works are different. It must be admitted that the 12 sanskrit sūtras, constituting the Śiva Jñāna are crisp, but the Tamil sūtras are more pregnant with meaning and concepts. Undoubtedly the Tamil work is the greatest and first work in Tamil, placing Śaiva Siddhanta on a rational footing. Secondly all the subsequent works on the subject are based on the Tamil work only and not on the Sanskrit work. So we are led to conclude, that though the form of expression as Sūtra, Kārika and Vṛtti is based on Sanskrit tradition, the work is an original contribution in Tamil.

Śakti as Grace

As this is an original and main contribution on the Śaiva doctrine we have to examine the concept of Śakti in this work. Most strikingly we have very little

1. S.I.I., Volume VIII, No. 74.

2. 'History of Tamil Literature' (Tamil) by M. Arunachalam, 13th Century Madras, 1970, P. 258.

said of Śakti in this work. The sūtras carry no reference at all to Śakti. One of the kārikas refer to Śakti as the grace of Lord, Śiva.

“Arul unḍām Isarku adu Śakti anṇe” 33

This is the only solitary reference to Śakti in this whole text, though all the later works of the school have treated the role of Śakti elaborately. However, the word ājñā in the second sūtra, stands for Chid-Śakti according to commentators. The word ājñā is used both in the sanskrit¹ and Tamil sūtras.

अम्वः सन् व्याप्तिः जनन्यः कर्ता कर्मानुसारतः
करोति संसृतिं पुनो घातया समवेतया

அவனே தானேயாகி அருவினையில் போக்குவரவு புரிய
ஆணையில் நீக்கலின்றி நிற்குமன்றே.

Sutra 2

The Lord exists in the universe as its form and life as Viśvātmā and yet remains beyond the universe Viśvāśīta, and through his Śakti (referred to as ājñā in the sūtra) orders the individual soul to be born and dead according to its own actions, says Pāṇḍipperumal, the earliest commentator on Śiva Jñāna Sūtra. The Kārika on the same sūtra is elucidated by Pāṇḍipperumal thus; There are three malas called ānava, Māya and Karma. They are beginningless. The Lord is Omniscient. The individual soul possesses only a limited knowledge. The Lord who creates the universe doesn't change.

Chit Śakti

The Chit Śakti of the Lord is manifold in nature. In that sense the Lord is spoken of as a Lord of pleasure and office, and becomes the possessor of Icca, Jñāna and Kriyā.

Māya is of two kinds as suddhamāya and asuddhamāya. They are like the two sides of a mirror. From suddhamāya, the following five principles namely Suddhāvidyā, Īśvara, Sādākhya, Śakti and Śiva appear. Also from the same appear, the four vāks; Sūkshma, Pasyanti, Madhyamā and Vaikharī.

When Suddhamāya remains as pure knowledge, it is called Śiva; when it stands as Kriyā it is called Śakti; when Jñāna and Kriyā on equal footing, it is called Sadāśiva. When there is more of Jñāna and less of Kriyā it is called Rudra and when Kriyā remains more than Jñāna it is called Maheśa. Rudra is also called Suddha Vidya.

These five manifestations as Vidyā, Īśvara, Sādākhya, Śakti and Sadāśiva are Suddha Tattvas and are considered the independent (Svatantra) forms of Śiva.

The words “induvin māyai āhi” denotes that Suddhamāyā and Asuddhamāyā are not two different entities.

The entities from Kalā to Prhvi appear from asuddhamāyā.

From Māyā emanate, Kalā, niyati, kalā, Vidyā, Rāga and Purusha; along with Māyā they are seven in number. From Kalā emanate mūlaprakṛiti. From the mūlaprakṛiti, the three guṇas, Satva, Rajas and Tamas appear. From this unmanifested Mūlaprakṛiti appear Citta and Buddhi.

The words Avyakta, Mūlaprakṛiti and Mahat are synonyms.

From Buddhi, emanates Ahankāra and from ahankāra jñāna. From Ahankāra, appear Jñānendriyas and Karmēndriyas.

The commentator Śiva Jnanayogi, gives the following points of interest on the same sūtras. When the Supreme principle remains as pure consciousness, without any reference to external objects it is called Śiva. But when it manifests as an illuminating light, it is called Śakti. The same commentator holds the word ājñā as a synonym of Chit Śakti of Para Śiva. Thus the word ājñā in the sūtra, stands for Chit Śakti which is considered an inherent samavāya śakti of the Supreme.

As mentioned earlier, the Kārika on the fifth sūtra, refers to aruḷ śakti, merciful energy of the supreme.

அருள் உண்டாம் ஈசற்கு அது சக்தியன்றே
அருளும் அவளன்றி யில்லை - அருளின்
நேலவகை இல்லை அருள் கண்ணார் கண்ணுக்கு
இரவிபோல் நிற்கும் அரன் எய்க்து.

In order to remove the individuality (paśutva) of the soul, and to bestow Śivatva, Śiva bestows grace and that grace is called Śakti. There is no Śiva without grace (Śakti) and there is no grace without Śiva. Śiva doesn't act himself but activates through his Śakti, by mere will force Sankalpa śrīṣṭi.

It would be interesting to compare the Śākta principle at this stage. "The Śākta Sāstra being a practical Sadhana Sastra, views the matter from our, that is the jiva stand point. To us the universe and ourselves are real. And Īsvara the creator is real. Therefore there is a creation and Śiva as Śakti creates by evolving into the universe and then appearing as all jivas".¹ It would be clear, that the highest philosophical truths, accepted by the Śāktas are not different from those held by Śaiva Siddhantins.

SIVAJÑĀNA SIDDHIYĀR

Arulnandi

Next to Sivajñānabodham of Meykandār, the most important work on Śaivasiddhānta is Śivajñāna Siddhi,² by Arulnandi Sivāchārya. Arulnandi Sivam, was a great scholar in Āgamas and was called Sakalāgama Paṇḍitar. He was the family teacher of Meykandār. In fact, Meykandār's father Kalappālar held Sakalāgama Paṇḍita in great veneration. But soon Sakalāgama Paṇḍita recognised the greatness of Meykandār and became his disciple. He is said to have received Śiva-dīksha at the hands of Meykandār. This is a noteworthy instance of a Brahmin Āchārya, Arulnandi, taking initiation at the hands of Meykandār, a Vellāla (Sūdra). Śaiva siddhāntins have not only preached equality of castes but have shown the way, in their own lives. Arulnandi lived in 13th century.

1. "Śākta and Śakti" by Sir John. Woodroffe, P. 279.

2. Sivajñānasiddhiyar—Meikanda Sathiram, published by Dharmapuram Mutt, 1942.

Arulnandi Sivam, pays respectful homage to Meykandār in his own works. Two of his works Sivajñāna Siddhi and Irupā Irupadu have survived. Sivajñāna Siddhi is Arulnandi's magnum opus. In excellent poetic form, he has elaborated the system of Meykandadeva in over six hundred verses.

Parapaksha and Svapaksha

Sivajñāna Siddhi is in two parts as Parapaksha and Svapaksha. In Parapaksha, 14 systems of Indian philosophies (Lokāyata, Sautrāntika, Yogāchara, Mādhyamika, Vaiśāṇika, Nigrandha, Ājīvaka, Bhāṣīnārāya, Prābhākara, Sabda Brahmanvāda, Māyāvāda, Bhaskariya, Nirīśvara sāṅkhya and Pāncarātra) are examined; their views quoted and rejected on logical grounds. It is an ocean of information on doctrines of various faiths as understood in Tamil land then. However, there is no reference in this to Vāmāchārins.

After detailing instruments of knowledge according to the Siddhānta School, the doctrine of Śaiva Siddhānta is expounded in Svapaksha in clear terms. It is a brilliant work and is the mainstay of Siddhānta school to this day.

Commentaries

Sivajñāna Siddhi has been commented upon by many scholars from very early times; Maraijñāna Sambandar, Sivāgrayogi, and Sivajñānāyogi are the well known commentators on this work. We draw mainly from Sivāgrayogi, whose commentary is not only elaborate but cites innumerable Sanskrit, Āgamic and other texts which are valuable for contemporary studies.

Though this work of Sivajñāna Siddhi is essentially a Śaiva doctrine, we are discussing it here at some length as it gives elaborately the concept of Śakti in this school. Our studies are confined to the Supreme principle, the manifestation of Śakti in various aspects, the nature of the Sādhakas, the similarities between this school and the Śākta school of the north discussed by Sir John Woodroffe.

Sivajñāna Siddhiyar begins with an invocation to Śiva, in which is condensed the Śaiva Siddhānta doctrine. According to the commentator, Śiva is invoked in this verse by both, his natural form Svarūpa and spiritual essence Tatastha lakṣaṇas.

The Great Dancer

“Śiva is limitless light of consciousness and mercy, without a beginning, middle or end. He has in himself Śakti, the Mother of this entire universe, as a part. He is the Lord of the Devas. This Paraśiva, wearing a crescent moon, and with his matted locks of hair whirling around, dances in the space ambala. Placing our head on his lotus feet let us remain with infinite love ever growing in us”.

According to the commentator Śivagrayogi, Śiva is beyond creation, sustenance and destruction. He is not bound by space or time. He is one pure, all pervading, self effulgent, consciousness and bliss. This is his Svarūpa lakṣhaṇa. In his spiritual essence Taṣastha, he is called by three names as Śakta, Udyukta and Pravṛtta. These are distinctions recognised by the manifestation of the Śakti and do not refer to different entities. In order to bestow grace to the individual soul, He becomes Śakta, i.e. manifests with Jñāna Śakti, which is one of his five Śaktis. So he is called Jñānamūrti. The undifferentiated Ādi Śakti of Śiva is the material cause of this universe. Śiva actuates Pure Māyā Suddhamāyā through his five Śaktis, and in this aspect is called Udyukta or Sadāśiva. From this aspect the five Sādākyas emanate :

- | | |
|--------------------|--------------------|
| 1. Śiva Sādākhyā | 4. Kartṛ Sādākhyā |
| 2. Amūrti Sādākhyā | 5. Karma Sādākhyā. |
| 3. Mūrti Sādākhyā | |

These are considered inarticulate forms Nishkalas.

From Bindu the following five emanate.

- | | |
|-----------|-------------|
| 1. Īśāna | 4. Śiva |
| 2. Īśvara | 5. Sadāśiva |
| 3. Brahma | |

These are called articulate forms Sakala.

In Sakala and Nishkala forms, the gross act is performed by Pure Māyā Suddhamāyā. The Subtle act in Suddhamāyā is performed by Śakta. The pravṛtta aspect is the cosmic dance of Śiva, which is panca kritya in Chit Sabhā.

Śivaśakti

The second invocatory verse is dedicated to Śivaśakti. In this verse, many aspects of the universal Śakti, through which the creation takes place, is indicated. Śakti is the inseperable, undifferentiated power of Śiva (samavāya Śakti). She resides in Parameśvara as heat in fire; But out of boundless mercy, she manifests herself in five forms to perform the five acts (panca kritya). The following are her five forms :

- | | |
|---------------|--------------------|
| 1. Parāśakti | 4. Jñāna Śakti and |
| 2. Ādiśakti | 5. Kriyā Śakti. |
| 3. Iccā Śakti | |

Śiva Srishṭi

Parāśakti manifests herself as one thousand part of Parameśvara. She bestows grace on ripe individual souls. From Parāśakti, appears Ādi Śakti as one thousand part, and she provides objective pleasures, vishaya sukha to individual souls, removes the impurity Aṇavamala from them. Iccā Śakti emanates from Ādi Śakti (one thousandth part) as a desire to create the universe. Jñāna Śakti is the Creator (appearing as one thousandth part of Iccā Śakti), who analyses the actions and the corresponding bodies, senses, worlds, and pleasures for the individual soul. The actual creation, Sirshī, is performed by Kriyā Śakti, who is one thousandth part of Jñāna Śakti.

This process of the appearance of the five Śaktis, is called Śivasrisī. These five Siva Sakti's are formless manifestations, nishkalas and are distinguished not by their differential nature, but by their actions.

Jñānaśakti acts as the imperceptible and at the same time illuminating knowledge to Śakta (We have seen three different manifestations of Paraśiva as Śakta (Udyukta and Pravṛtta)).

Śakta is inarticulate (Nishkala); Udyukta is with and without articulation (Sakala Nishkala); and Pravṛtta, the articulate form (Sakala). From the five Śaktis emanates Udyukta, who is also known as Sadaśiva. From each Śakti appears a corresponding form called Sādakhyas (as one tenth of the corresponding Śakti).

From Paraśakti appears Śiva Sādakhyas

From Ādiśakti	—	Amūrta Sādakhya
Iccā Śakti	—	Mūrta Sādakhya
Jñāna Śakti	—	Kartṛ Sādakhya
Kriyā Śakti	—	Karma Sādakhya

Because of these five forms, He is called Sadaśiva.

Maheśvara emanates from this Sadaśiva as one thousandth part, through Kriyā Śakti. He creates the 25 forms of Śiva as an act of Suddhamāya. He is Pravṛtta. He is also called Anantesvara. The Śakti hereby becomes Bhoga Śaktis, like Manōnmani to Sadaśiva.

The Mother

The Primordial Mother creates innumerable souls, ripen their impurities mala and bestows supreme bliss. She removes the cycle of births and deaths of individual souls. She remains and appears to the individual souls, from whom the malas have vanished as undifferentiated illuminating light in the universal father Śiva.

According to Śaiva Siddhānta, though the souls are eternal, Śiva and Śakti are spoken of as parents for the following reason. At the time of great deluge the individual soul remains as a pure ego Ānava without even the slightest knowledge of its existence. It remains as if it is non-existent. From this stage of apparent non-existence, the Supreme Śakti unveils its ignorance a little and make the soul realise its existence. It is in this sense She is called the mother and as she is inseparable from Śiva. He is called the father of the universe.

This concept that Śiva is the creator of the individual soul is recognised till the final realisation of the individual soul, which becomes Śiva svarūpa at the time of final emancipation.

Dr. Devasenapathi in his work 'Śaiva Siddhanta' refers to these concepts as follows.

"Parāśakti is one viewed in a general way as the included intelligence. According to different in activity it becomes differentiated into three, effective energy cognitive energy and conative energy. These, again, are differentiated into many according to the differences, among their respective activities. Affective energy is the Lord's grace involved in removing the mala of the souls and granting them the attainment of salvation; cognitive energy is his knowledge of the ways by which he can do what he desires to do; and conative energy is what he wills to do and does accordingly".

"Where Śiva and Śakti unite we have Sadāśiva tattva. They both unite joyfully and cause the origination of the intelligent and inert universe. Nevertheless Śiva, is a celibate and Śakti is a Virgin".¹

Validity of Vedas and Āgamas

The Śaiva Siddhanta recognise the validity of both Vedas and Āgamas. They are valid because they emanate from Śiva. The word Āgama is split into a, ga, and ma; a represents Śivajñāna ga represents mokshasādhana and ma stands for the destruction of mala. These are again differentiated into three as Tantrakalā, Mantrakalā and Upadesakalā. The Tantrakalā stands for such acts as agnishōma, 'Śivapūja' etc.

We consider this statement very significant. It is clear, the Tantric rituals (āgamic), were modelled on, if not evolved from, Vedic sacrificial rites. It would be shown later that the construction of temples for deities also sought to give a permanence to these rituals in a visual form.

The Mantrakalā stands for upāsana mārga. That is controlling the mind and other senses and by meditating on the nyāsa, ṛshi, chandas, adhidēvata, blja and śakti of the Lord, one choses. Mantra means that which protects the man, who meditates. (It might represent Vedic mantra or Āgamic mantra).

The Upadesakalā is that which teaches the Śivarūpa of Śiva, the individual soul and the bondage. Āgamas are divided into four sections as caryā, Kriyā yāga and Jñānapādas. Caryā and Kriyāpādas are included in Tantrakalā; yogapadā in mantrakalā and Jñānapada in upadesa kalā.

It seems to us that the division of Āgamas into four padas as caryā, kriya, yāga and jñānapāda, are artificial brought into force on analogy with the four vedas. The caryā and kriyā are such divisions that the commentators have to defend the divisions rather feebly. According to the Siddhantins Vedas are eternal because they are the work of Śiva and because they persist upto the deluge.²

Vēdabhāhyas

Sivāgrayogin, the commentator raises an interesting question. Since the Vedas and Āgamas are valid according to Siddhantins, as these were brought into existence by

1. Śaiva Siddhanta by Dr. Devasenapaty, Madras, 1974, P. 107-08.

2. Ibid., P. 41.

Śiva himself, would they not be compelled to accept such agamic schools like vāma, Kālāmukha and even *Bauddha*¹ Here Śivāgrayogi has preserved a tradition for us. The tradition is that all these texts (Vāma, Kālāmukha etc.) were undoubtedly brought into existence by Śiva. But they are meant for those who do not accept the authority of Vedas and are also intended for deluding the asuras. This seems to be the stand taken by Āgamas like Kāmika which tell that these Vāma, Kālāmukha etc. are considered Vedabhāyas and are therefore invalid.

Here we see clearly an attempt by the followers of the Āgamic school to identify themselves with the Vedic school and reject the pure Tantric schools like Vāma, Kālāmukha etc. as invalid. In this commentary Vāma, pāsupata, Lākula and Bhairava are called non-Vedic Vedabhāyas. The commentator completes his identity with Vedic school by saying that prohibition to Tantric rites mentioned in smrtis like Manusmṛiti and others, relate only to the non Vedic schools.

The Chit Śakti of Śiva enters the Bindu which is pure Māyā Suddhamāyā, as a result of which Nāda emanates, 'a' kārā emanates thus. The inseperable Śakti which generated this sound, is called yogamāyā. From this Bindu will emanate Aparā bindu which will manifest in order as Sūkshma, Pasyanti, Madhyamā and Vaikhari.

Ambikā Śakti appears at the bottom of Bindu Śakti actuated by Śiva's will Iccā. Other Śaktis called Vāma, Jyeshthā and Raudra, emanate from Her. Vāma will remain like a coiled sleeping serpent; Jyeshthā like a stick and Raudri like a horn with two branches.

Māyā taking on a lower form assumes the forms of sixteen Śaktis.

- | | |
|---------------------|----------------------|
| 1. Jayā | 9. Indikā |
| 2. Vijayā | 10. Dīpikā |
| 3. Ajitā | 11. Rochikā |
| 4. Parājitā | 12. Mocikā |
| 5. Nivirti | 13. Vyomarūpā |
| 6. Pratiṣṭhā | 14. Anantā |
| 7. Vidyā | 15. Anāthā |
| 8. Sānti | 16. Anāsrī |

These Śaktis will pervade the entire universe from Śivalattva to Prithvi tattvas. From these Śaktis the fifty letters commencing from 'a' are produced. Without the Śakti, which is the form of letters, which is gracious, which is of the forms of sounds and meanings, there is neither the world of names nor the world of forms².

Bindu, Mohini and Mahat

Bindu is the instrumental cause (upādāna kāraṇa) of the Pure path Suddha adhvā. Mohini is the instrumental cause of the mixed path misra adhvā and Mahat is the 1. Saiva Siddhānta by Devasenapathy, P. 78.

2. Ibid., P. 45.

instrumental cause of impure path Asuddha adhvā. Śivāgrayogins gives the views of other schools like Śivādvaita, Vāmādvaita. Śivādvaiti holds Isvara as the instrumental cause —upādāna kāraṇa of the universe.

Here we have a distinction between the Vāma school and Śaiva Siddhānta school. The distinction between Suddha māyā and Asuddha māyā have been accepted for the following reason for purpose of universal creation. Śaiva siddhāntins accepts Vijñāna kalā. He has body, senses etc. The body senses of this Vijñāna kalā cannot emanate from asuddha māyā which is responsible for the lower regions. So Suddha Bindu is considered the instrumental cause—upādāna of the suddhamāyā.

While the Vāma mārgins hold Chit Śakti as instrumental cause, Siddhantins hold Bindu as the cause; this shows Bindu is different from Chit Śakti in Siddhānta doctrine. Bindu is also called *Yoga māyā*¹ in which the Chit Śakti enters and activates.

Regarding Chit Śakti, Sir John Woodroffe has the following to say "This pure consciousness or cit is the Paramātmā nirguṇa Śiva, who is Being-Consciousness-Bliss (Saccidānanda). That which is the nature of Paramātmā never changes not with standing the creative ideation (Sṛiṣṭi Kalpanā) which is the manifestation of Śakti as Chit Śakti and Māyā Śakti. It is this latter Śakti which according to Śakta tantra evolves".² This is at variance with the commentators view of Vāma school. According to the commentator, Chit Śakti is the upādāna cause while according to Woodroffe, it is the Māyā Śakti which is different from Chit Śakti, that is the instrumental cause of the universe.

Vaikarī the transforming sound can be heard by others. It appears as an audible sound being in association with udaya, it appears in Buddhi as sound and word in association with vital breadth (prāṇa vāyu) and is the meaning of word uttered.

Madhyamā the middle sound is different from Vaikarī; it cannot be heard by others. It is also not formed by letters and their combination; nor is it in association with vital breadth (prāṇavāyu). It is an internal sound. It is in association with mild breathing.

Baisantī (Pasyantī) is that seeing or beholding sound which contains the fifty one syllables. It is also an illuminative entity and causes the production of the Madhyamā Vāk. It remains with prāṇavāyu.

Sūkshma is a subtle, internal, illuminating knowledge-sound, from which the other three sounds emanate. All sounds dissolve at the end, in this Sūkshma. It does not dissolve with other three sounds, but disappears only with the ego impurity (ānavamala) of the individual souls.

The individual souls do not recognise easily their selfs as different from this Sūkshma vāk. The souls which have performed Kalāsodhana or the benediction of guru, will alone be able to distinguish this vāk from their individual souls.

1. Ibid. Page 82.

2. 'Śakti and Śakta' by Sir John Woodroffe. Page. 275.

While discussing Śivajñāna bodham, we have seen that grace is considered the Śakti of Isvara and that it does not exist without Śiva. The Śivajñāna Siddhiyār echoes the same idea in dealing with the fifth sutra.

அருள் அது சக்தியாகும் அரன் தனக்கு அருளை இன்றி
தெருள் சிவம் இல்லை அந்தச் சிவமின்றி சக்தி இல்லை
மருளின அருளால் வாட்டி மன்னுயிர்கட்கு அளிப்பன் கன்கட்கு
இருளின ஒலியால் ஓட்டும் இரவியைப் போல் ஈசன்
(283)

Grace is the Śakti of Śiva. There is no Śiva without this Śakti and there is no Śakti without Śiva. Śiva will dispel the power of ignorance of the ripe individual soul and bestow grace through his Śakti.

The Role of Guru

The role of Guru (the teacher) in the spiritual evolution of the individual soul is clearly emphasised by Sir John Woodroffe in his Śakti and Sakta.¹ "Until a Sādhaka is a siddha all sādhanā is or should be undertaken with authority and under the direction of a guru or spiritual teacher and Director. There is in reality but one guru and that is the Lord (Isvara) himself. He is the supreme guru as also his Devi his power, one with himself. But he acts through man and human means. The ordinary human guru is but the manifestation on earth of the Ādinātha, Mahākāla and Mahākālī, the supreme guru residing in Kailāsa." This is of course in the tradition of smritis, like that of Manu. The Śaiva Siddhānta also lays great emphasis on the role of Guru. "Śiva comes in the form of the preceptor and performs diksha"²

சூரிய காந்திக் கல்லிடத்தே செய்ய
கடர்தோன்றி யிடச் சோதி தோன்றுமா போல்
ஆரியனும் ஆசான் வந்து அருளால் தோன்ற
அடிஞானம் ஆன்மாவில் தோன்றும் தோன்றத்
தூரியனும் சிவன் தோன்றும் தானும் தோன்றும்
தொல்லுலகம் எல்லாம் தன்னுள்ளே தோன்றும்
நேரியனும் பிரியனுமாய் உயிரக்குயிராய் எங்கும்
நின்ற நிலை எல்லாம் முன் நிகழ்ந்து தோன்றும்
(8-28)

The following translation of the commentary on this verse, from Devasenapathis. "Śaiva Siddhānta" clearly enunciate the role of Guru and the process of realisation.

1. Ibid., P. 538-539.

2. 'Śaiva Siddhānta. Page 241.

"Śivāgra yogin speaks of the ritual, knowledge and sambhava initiation Kriyā, Jñāna and Sāmbhava dīkshās. By Kriyā dīksha, the bondage of Karma is removed. Jñāna dīksha is performed by contemplation, done with Chit Śakti. Sāmbhava dīksha is done with Chit-Śakti alone. In this way the paths adhvās are purified. What is meant by purification of adhvās? Karma in the six paths adhvās are destroyed. Māyā is removed; the obstruction of ego ānava is also removed. By grades of initiation dīkshā, tattvas are removed one by one and the soul is restored to its real nature of pervasiveness and omniscience.

Caste and Sex

The Śaiva Siddhāntins like the Śāktas are more catholic in approach, so far as caste and sex are concerned. All persons irrespective of caste or sex or eligible for following the Siddhānta school. However there should be a genuine desire on the part of the individual to attain Śivajñāna. They should not consume prohibited food or drinks. They should have taken Saivite initiation Śiva dīksha, at the hands of a competent guru. Even in the case of the twice borns, they must satisfy these requirements and can not become Śivajñānins, merely by virtue of their birth.¹

The Śakta tantras do not place any restriction of caste or sex on its followers. "The Tantra Śāstra makes no caste distinction as regards worship, in the sense that it may not challenge the exclusive right of the twice born to Vaidic rites, it provides other and similar rites for the Sudra. Thus there is both a Vaidic and Tantric gāyatrī and Sandhyā, and there are rites available for worshippers of all castes. Even the lowest outcaste caṇḍāla, if otherwise fit receive the Tantric initiation and be a member of a cakra or circle of worship. According to Tantra Śāstra a woman may not only receive Mantra but may as a guru initiate and give it".²

Path of Jñāna

Though the Siddhāntins accepts the four fold path as caryā, kriyā, yōga and Jñāna, he concludes that final emancipation is possible only through the path of knowledge Jñāna mārga. The caryā, kriyā and yōga paths lead one to Jñāna mārga and do not by themselves bestow liberation (Sutra-8). This Jñāna is bestowed through the form of a guru by the Lord himself.

This clearly indicates, that as a result of intense disputation and dialogue, the various schools have drifted away from Bhakti mārga, which was the most dominant form of expression from 6th to 9th century A.D. The impact is mainly due to the masterly exposition of Jñāna mārga by the Advaita teacher Sankara. His brilliance forced all the other schools of South Indian philosophies to resort to dialectics in preference to Bhakti. That is what we see as a new movement in Śaiva school. The days of the devotional hymns are no more. Even the emphasis on yōga one witnesses, in Thirumandiram, has been abandoned. Many ideas of those earlier movements have been integrated, but the superiority of the Jñāna is emphasised.

1. Ibid., Page 47.

2. Śivagrayogin's commentary, pp. 188-189.

Sex

The Siddhāntin is not averse to sexual pleasures. He only tried to sublimate it by the story of Kāmadahana. "When the Lord was in yogic meditation, the celestials began to pine for sexual pleasures although Manmatha was present. Vishnu desiring to alleviate their distress, sent his son Manmatha, to influence Śiva. Enraged by his interference with his meditation, Śiva burned Manmatha to ashes. However taking pity on the souls, Śiva wedded the daughter of Himalayas and thereby caused great happiness to souls".

"Though Manmatha was present he was unable to stimulate sexual urge. It has to be sanctified by the Lords personal example, so to speak. We find here a healthy attitude to the problem of sex. The play and gratification of sexual instinct are not frowned upon. Nor is there any over emphasis on sex because release through meditation becomes equally obligatory".¹

Bindu, Mohini, Mahat

The Siddhiyār accepts three entities i.e., Bindu, Mohini and Man (Mahat) as the material cause of the universe. Among them Bindu is the supreme entity, in which Śiva Śakti emanates. Only the Mahāmāyā is the primordial natural cause. The space actuated by her is called prakāsa, Mōhaka, and Ānjaka. The same are called Suddha, Suddhā—suddha, and Asuddha. Bindu, Mohini and Man (Mahat) are synonyms of the same words. The universe that emanated from Bindu is called peaceful one sāntātmaka; the one from Mohini is called the terrible ghorātmaka and the one that emanated from Mahat is insentient jaḍātmaka. The primordial material cause is Kundalini also called Mahāmāyā "says Śivagrayogin.² Śakti coiled round Śiva making one point with it is kuṇḍalinī Śakti.³

Valdikas Cursed

Śivagrayogin has the following to say on Śivagamas. The Vedas do not mention anything about the worship of images from selection to installation, and from festival to the end. They do not also mention the objections raised by and the answers to the schools like Cāruvākas. Śivagamas deal with what had not been included in Vedas, besides the subtle meanings enunciated by Vedānta. As such there is no difference between Vedas and Āgamas. Treatises other than Vedas and Śivagamas are not valid. That this is the view of the Śivagnāna siddhiyār is clear from the following verse where he catagorically states so.

வேதநூல் சைவ நூல் என்று இரண்டே நூல்கள்
வேறு உரைக்கும் நூல் இவற்றின் விரிந்த நூல்கள்
ஆதிநூல் அனாதி அமலன் தரு நூலிரண்டும்
ஆரண நூல் பொது சைவம் அரும் சிறப்பு நூலாம்

1. 'Serpant power' Sir John Woodroffe. P. 35.

2. Śivagrayogin's Commentary. P. 76.

3. 'Serpant Power', P. 36.

தீதிலினால் உலகர்க்கும் சக்தி நிபாதர்க்கும்
தீதில் பொருள் கொண்டு உரைக்கிடம் நூல் சைவம் பிற நூல்
திகழ் பூர்வம் சிவா கமங்கள் சித்தாந்தமாகும்.

(8 - 15).

There has been some stiff opposition from some sects to accept Saivāgamas as Vaidic in nature. The scholars of the period were also aware that the Vedas do not speak of image worship as a form of Devata ārādhana. So Arulnandi defends the Vaidic nature of Āgamas.

Śivagrayogins cites an interesting tradition of the non Vedic origin of Tantric worship.¹ 'Tantric worships are spoken ill off in puranas. Further some Brahmins who were cursed by sages like Durvāsa, Dadīci, Gautama, Kapva, Bṛgu and Upamanyu, approached Vishnu and Śiva and prayed for their lively-hood. In order that these Brahmins cursed by Brahma sāpa, will get their lively-hood, and the Asuras will be deluded, Āgamas were created. Dravida rulers like Sandilya and Chitrānāma went to hell by following Tāntric rites'. Śivajñayogin explains this tradition as refering to non-Vedic Tāntric school and not to the Tāntric schools following the Vedas.

This tradition is again an indication of the non Vedic origin of the Āgamas. That Drāviḍa kings went to hell by following the Tantric rites might indicate that either the Tāntric cult had its origin in Dravida desa, or it was widely prevalent in that region. The association of Brahmins is an indication of the inter mixing of the Vedic with non-vedic schools.

ŚIVAPRĀKĀŚA AND SANKALPA NIRĀKARANA

Umāpati Śivam

Next to Arulnandi, Umāpati Śiva of Korravankudi, was the greatest exponent of Saiva Siddhānta doctrine. Umapati Śivam was a prolific writer both in Tamil and Sanskrit. As many as eight of his Tamil works are included in the (14 works) the Siddhānta canon, popularly called Meykaṇḍa Sāstras. The eight Tamil works of Umāpati Śivam, are Śivaprakāśam,² Sankalpa nirākarana, Thiru Arulpayan, Vinā venba (question and answers), Poṟṟi Pahroḍai, Koḍikkavi, Nenjuviḍudūtu (heart-messenger) and Unmaineri viḷakkam (the definition of true path).

Besides these Sāstric works, Umāpati is attributed with a few outstanding puranic works in Tamil. One called Koyilpurānam is on the Chidambaram temple, and the second is on the discovery of the Devaram hymns in the temple of Chidambaram by Rājārāja Chola. The work is called Thirumurai Kaṇḍa Purānam. The third is Sekkilār Purānam, on the life of Sekkilār, the brilliant author of Periyapurānam.

Of Umāpati Śivam's outstanding works in sanskrit are Paushkara Bhāshya and Sataratna Sangraha. While the former is a commentary on Paushkara āgama, one of

1. Śivagrayogin's Commentary, P. 76.

2. Sankalpa-nirakarana—Mailanda Sattiram. Published by Dharmapuram Mutt. 1942.

the Upāgamas, the later consists of 100 verses collected from various Āgamas like Svāyambuva, Nisvāsa, Devi yāmala, Devi Kālottara etc. Umāpati is second in discend, as an āchārya from Arulnandi. His Sankalpa nirākarana was completed in Śaka 1235 (1313 A.D.).

“ஆசானுவி வீசிய சமப்துடன்
ஏழஞ்சிருநூறு எடுத்த ஆயிரம்
வாமும் நற் சகனம் மருவாநிற்று”

(சங்கற்ப நிராகரணம் பாயிரம் வரிகள் : 25 - 27)

This is one of the rare works for which we have a reference to the date of its composition by the author himself.

Śivaprākasa

The Śivaprākasa consists of one hundred verses, giving the outline of Siddhānta doctrine as expounded by Meykaṇḍadeva and elaborated by Arulnandi. The nature of the Lord, His manifesting Śakti, the bondage and the path leading to its removal are thus detailed.

The work begins with an invocation to the cosmic dancer followed by salutations to Śivakāmi, the consort of the Dancer.

Naṭarāja

“On our head and heart we shall entertain and cherish the beautiful lotus feet of him, who is the source of the Primordeal rising light, whose form is grace and wisdom, whose spreading tresses are the seat of honeyed flowers of Konral, the crescent moon, the river Ganga, and the glistening serpent and who with intent to lift us from the endless chain of births, dances in the common hall of all souls to the applauding tunes of angles, of feasting eye of mother Umā the protector of all the world”.¹ This translation however does not do justice to the original which has more to convey. It is a tradition to write the invocatory verse in such a way as to reflect the entire message of the book in a nut shell. Following this practice, Umāpati Śivam salutes Naṭarāja, the cosmic dancer, who represents the Supreme Lord.

He is ever shining, self effulgent, nirmalaswarūpa Paramasiva. He is Mercy and Jñāna incarnate. Through his grace, he manifests as Iccā, Jñāna and Kriyā Śaktis. Umā the mother of the universe witnesses the dance. Umāparamesvari is the material cause of the universe, according to Siddhānta doctrine. As such she is spoken of as the Mother of the universe. Śiva's dance is intended to remove the cycle of births and deaths. The dance of Śiva represents Pañcakṛityās the five acts. The Siddhiyār gives the following verse.

1. Sivaprakasam.—English translation by K. Subramanya Pillai, Dharmapuram, 1945.

“உலகமே உருவமாக யோனிகள் உருப்பதாக
இலகு பேரிச்சை ஞானம் கிரியையுட் கரணமாக
அலகிலா உயிர்கட்கெல்லாம் ஒரு பயனாகி இயைந்து
நலமிகு தொழில்களோடு நாடக நடிப்பனாதன்”.

Śivakāmi

The second verse extolling the greatness of Śivakāmi is important as it directly enumerates the concept of Śakti.

பரந்த பராபரையாதி பரன திச்சை
பரஞானங் கிரியை பரபோக ரூபந்
தருங்கருணை யுருவாகி விகத்தா சுத்தத்
தனுக்ரண புவனபோ கங்கள் கரங்க
விரிந்த வுபாதானங்கள் மேவி யொன்றாய்
விமலமா லயந்தொழிற்கும் வித்தாய் ஞாலத்
தரந்தை கெட மணிமன்றுளடல் காணும்
அன்னை அருள் பாதமலர் சென்னி வைப்பாம்.¹

She is all pervasive Parāparai, Paripūrṇa parāśakti. She Herself manifests as Ādisakti also known as Tirodha Śakti. This Supreme Śakti, manifests herself as Iccā, Jñāna and Kriyā of the Lord and also the all merciful power that gives final emancipation (the last refers to Parāśakti aspect). She also activates pure and impure Suddha and Asuddha Māyās, each forming its own tanu, kāraṇa, Bhuvana and bhoga (body, senses, world and pleasures). Yet She remains aloof, unstinted by their activities. She remains as a Vimalarūpi (purā). She also forms the seed of the five acts panca krītyas. This Supreme Śakti witnesses the dance in the space ambala for removing the miseries of this universe. We salute this Cosmic Mother.

It may be seen that all the Siddhantic concepts, especially with reference to Śakti are vividly picturised in this invocatory verse.

The same concepts especially with reference to the nature of Supreme, and the Śakti, are given in almost the same vein in the two verses under the first sūtra. It is needless to give their translation, but the verses are so fine, we give them below.

பல கலையா கமவேதம் யாவையினுங் கருத்துப்
பதிபசுபா சந்தெரித்தல் பதிபரமே யதுதான்
நிலவுமரு வருவின்றி குணங்குறிக லின்றி
நின்மலமா பேகமாய் நித்த மாகி
அலகிலுயிர்க் குணர்வாகி யசலமாகி
அகண்டிதமா யானந்த வருவா யன்றிச்
செலவரிதாய்ச் செல்கறிபாய்ச் சிரிதாகி பெரிதாய்
திகழ்வதுதற் சிவமென்பர் தெரிந்து னோரே.²

1. Ibid., v. 2.

2. Ibid., v. 13.

நீடுபரா சத்திரிக ழிச்சா ஞான
 நிறை கிரியை தரவதனை நிமலன் மேலி
 நாடறிய கருணைதிரு வருவ மாகி
 நலின்று பல கலைநாத விந்து வாதி
 கடுமொலி வளர் குடிசை மாயை மேலிக்
 கொடு வினைகொள தனுசுரண புவனபோகம்
 நீடுபெற நிறுவியவை ஒடுக்கு மேனி
 பிறங்கியநிட் கனசகனப் பெற்றியாமே.¹

It is interesting to see that Suddhamāya is here referred to as Kuṭilā. The commentator, Śivaprakāśar of Madurai, takes it as a synonym of Mahāmāyā.

*Saṅkalpa Nirākarana*²

The other work Saṅkalpa nirākarana by Umāpati Śivam, is essentially a work of disputation of the other schools. We have already stated that this work was composed in 1313 A.D. In this work, Māyavāda, Aikyavāda, Pāśhanavāda, Bhedavāda, Śivasamavada, Samkrāntavāda, Īsvara Avikāravāda, Nimittakāraṇa Parināmvāda and Saivavāda, are examined and refuted. The school ultimately expounded is called Siddhānta Śaiva. This is a very important work, which gives the various schools that existed in Tamil country before 14th century A.D. From the point of the present study it is interesting in another way. Though it mentions many sub-schools, within the Śaiva faith, it does not refer to the Vāma school. It seems to suggest that the Sakta school, did not have a separate existence, but was integrated into the Saiva faith itself.

*Sata Ratna Sangraha*³

Umāpati adopted a novel method of collecting a total of one hundred verses from various Āgamas, and weaving into a fine book that outlines the Siddhānta doctrine in a cogent way. The Āgamas thus represented are :

- | | |
|--------------------------|-----------------------------|
| 1. Devi Kālottara | 7. Nisvāsa |
| 2. Deviyāmala | 8. Paushkara |
| 3. Kālottara | 9. Sarvajñānottara |
| 4. Vīrāgama | 10. Śvāyambhuva and |
| 5. Mātanga | 11. Viśvasāroṭtara . |
| 6. Mrgēndra | |

This work has been commented by an anonymous author. Originally published in the Tantric texts series, by Pancanana Sastri, it has recently been published with an English translation by Prof. P. Thirugnānasambandam, in the Madras University

1. Ibid., v. 14.

2. Saṅkalpa-nirākarana—Naikanda Sattiram. Page. 299.

3. Sataratna Sangraha—English translation by Professor P. Thirugnānasambandam. Madras University. 1973.

series. (1973). Since a number of Āgamic texts, that were in existent before 14th century A.D. are quoted by Umāpati, we examine briefly the work with special reference to Śakti.

“In order to enable the soul to be liberated from the triple bonds of Ānava, Māyā and Karma and to realise Śiva-hood inherent in him, knowledge flows from Siva”. According to the commentator the Śivajnāna is identical with Śiva Śakti which comprehends also his will that bestows grace on the ripe soul. This Śiva Śakti has a positive and a negative aspect i.e. bestowal of grace and destruction of the bonds and this plays a role of Jnāna in leading to bliss.

‘This Jnāna is of two kinds, the higher and the lower. The higher knowledge is called *Avabodha*¹ and the lower, the great Sāstra’.

The Subdivisions of Avabodha may be indicated thus

‘The locus of action of the Pati is in the form of his lustrous potency’.²

‘That Śakti is supreme, subtle, all pervasive, and nectarine. It is free from any bond, tranquil and non different from God intensely eager to help the soul; this eternal Śakti is graceful; its description as a form is only figurative’. The means is none other than Śakti, which being associated with the Supreme consciousness (Śiva) cannot be an entity lacking consciousness.¹

1. Ibid., Page 3.

2. Ibid., Page 9.

'That Śakti of Mahesvara is quite an auspicious one that bestows grace on everyone. Yet it is called pāsa in a secondary sense.

तासां माहेश्वरी शक्तिः सर्वानुग्राहिका शिवा. २२.

'This Śakti of Śiva brings about a transformation in the nature of the several Śaktis of anava until that power is exhausted and when by its light comparable to the light of the sun, it brings about enlightenment to the soul then it is called benevolent'.

Vāgisvari is the basic material-cause of the tattvas in the pure path Suddha adhvā.²

वागीश्वरी तु शुद्धाध्वमूलोपादान कारणं

The commentator says Paushkara Āgama, describes Vāgisvari as Parāvidya, as distinct from Māyā. Which is identified with Nescience. Several synonyms of Mahāmāyā occur in the Āgamas and they are recounted in Nādakārika. Among them we find Nāda, Parama mangalā, Mālini, Mahāmāyā, Anāhata bindu, Aghoshā vāk, Brahma Kuṇḍalini Tattva, Vidyā etc.

The Kundalini (Mahāmāyā) Śakti functions in accordance with the Māyā and Karma in the world of the pure (Suddhādhva) and forms the source of the Tattvas, Nāda, bindu etc. (Visvasārottara)

यथा कुण्डलिनी शक्तिः माया कर्मानुसारिणी
माय विवर्तारिकं कार्यं तस्या इति जगन्मिथति :

"This Śakti is to be distinguished from the Supreme Śakti which is inherent in and inseparable from Lord Śiva. The Kundalini Śakti is a step below that Śakti. It acts in conformity with Māyā and Karma, in the form of Kalās like Nivṛtthi and serves as the ultimate source of the tattvas like earth. It is also in the form of the power of the world Vāk śakti in conformity with karma. Śivajñāna Swāmi explains this Śakti as something which is coiled like a serpent existing severally in every soul in the form of Nāda, its own evolute though it is really one.

The first tattva that arises from Kundalini is the Nāda otherwise called Nāda Tattva. The next stage is bindu, otherwise called Śakti tattva. The next one is Sadhākhyā followed by Īśa which in turn is followed by vidyā Tattva. These five constitute the five higher tattvas.

The vidyā tattva comprehends the cover lord of that tattva, the seven queens of vidyā, namely Bhṛguni, Brahma vetālī, Sthānumatī, Ambikā, Rupinī, Nandini and Jvālā (commentary).

"That Supreme and pure potency inhering in Śiva is in reality only one. It is inseparable from Sambhu as heat is from fire. It is the connecting link between the soul and Śiva."

1. Ibid., Page 12.

2. Ibid., Page 24.

एकैव वस्तुतः शीवी या शक्तिः निर्मला परा
प्रविनाभाविनी शम्भोः श्रुतेः उज्ज्वल प्रभोः

We have shown these Āgamic citations at length, only to show, that developing ideas with reference to Śakti were steadily and deliberately assimilated into the Śaiva Siddhānta school and the claim that they belong to one particular school of thought may have to be rejected.

JNĀNĀVARNAVILAKKAM

There is an interesting work, Jnānāvarnavilakkam,¹ composed by Guru Jnāna Sambandar, the first pontif of the Dharmapuram mutt. The work running to several hundred verses, has not however survived. Only a few verses are now available. But this has an excellent commentary by Velliambalavana Tambran Swami who was an erudite scholar, both in Tamil and Sanskrit. He gives the numbers of the original verses and elaborates their content. The commentary is such an excellent and elaborate treatise it is called a Mahābhāṣya. The commentator went to Benares and learned both Sanskrit and Tamil treatises at the feet of Kumaragurupara. As we know that Kumaragurupara was a contemporary of Thirumalai Nayak of Madura, the author of the commentary lived in 17th century A.D. is evident. Gurujnānasambandar the author of the original text lived in 16th century A.D.

As mentioned earlier the commentator was a remarkable scholar, who cites from more than one hundred texts in his works. The works cited are both in Tamil and Sanskrit, a good number of which have not survived. All that we have are the citations in this commentary. He quotes profusely from almost all the major Āgamas like Kāmika, Kārana, Cintya, Raurava etc., besides a number of other works. He cites many Siddhānta texts like.

- | | |
|-----------------------------------|------------------------------------|
| 1. Siddhānta Samuccaya. | 6. Jnāna ratnāvali. |
| 2. Siddhānta dipika. | 7. Jnānasiddhi. |
| 3. Siddhānta rahasya. | 8. Jnānānta paribhāṣa. |
| 4. Siddhānta bodha. | 9. Jnānāchāra. |
| 5. Sarva Siddhānta Vivēka. | 10. Jnāna dikshā prakāśikā. |

Besides, a few saṃhitā texts like Vāyu saṃhitā, Bhīma saṃhitā, Sūta saṃhitā etc., and a few sthalapurāṇas are also prominently mentioned among which are Chidambara Māhātmya, Svetāranya Māhātmya and Vṛiddhagiri māhātmya. Among the Tamil works, Tattvāmṛta, Paripūrṇasiddhi and the work of Nirāmayadeva are rare texts referred to.

This commentary is one of the most valuable works which gives the philosophy of various schools of Indian sects citing their original texts, that existed before 17th century A.D. All the sects cited are not necessarily South Indian in character. As mentioned earlier the commentator spent considerable period of his life in Benares, studying the texts there. Hence the citations must be considered all Indian in character with perhaps an emphasis on philosophies that were more popularly studied in Benares in the 17th century A.D.

1. 'Jnānavarna vilakkam' with the commentary of Velliambalavana Tambiran, Dharma-Puran-1957.

The light this commentary throws on the Śakti cult is so bright that we are tempted to discuss it here rather in detail.

The Vāma school is called Sāmbhava Sāstra while the Bhairava Sāstra is called Dakṣiṇa school. The Yāmala Sāstra is considered a mixed school, dealing mainly with the worship of Saptamātas.

Vāmam hi Sāmbhavam Sāstram Dakṣiṇam Bhairavātmakam Misram Yāmalam iti uktam Saptamātr pradhānakam.

The yāmala is also said to relate to Navasakti vidhi.

Nine books of the yāmala school are mentioned. They are :—

- | | |
|-------------------------|---------------------------------|
| 1. Paratatvarāga | 5. Kālāgamam |
| 2. Paramāgamam | 6. Deva prāsādam |
| 3. Śivagamam | 7. Paratantrāvatāram |
| 4. Saktyāgamam | 8. Śivapūjasāram and |
| | 9. Śivasādākhyaprasādam. |

The philosophy expounded by these nine Āgamas are also nine fold. They are :—

- | | |
|-----------------------|--------------------------|
| 1. Vāma | 6. Advaitavāma |
| 2. Mantravāda | 7. Dvaitavāma |
| 3. Yantravāda | 8. Misravāma and |
| 4. Aushadavāda | 9. Vāmasiddhānta. |
| 5. Karmavāda | |

The Vāma and Bhairava sects are considered the inner schools of the Śaiva faith. The nine sub-sects among the Vāma school are outlined in the text as follows.

Vāma School :

The Vāma sect considers Paramēsvari Śakti as the Supreme who causes the Śakti, Brāhmi and Vaishnavi to create and protect the universe. In whichever form the Śakti manifests she assumes that name. Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Rudra, Vidyēsas, Gaṇēsvaras, gr̥has, mothers, the stars, the planets and all other beings are Śakti's and reside in Śakti. It is only by her power and energy, these beings stay in their positions, have Śakti as their soul, assume forms and act.

Śakti samjñās tu te Sarvā bhajanti tadadhiṣṭitās

The world is pervaded by Śakti; The world emanates from Śiva. Śakti is the Supreme Śiva.

*Jagat Saktimayam Vyāptam
Jagat Saktimayam Śivam
Jagat utpadyatē Saktēś
Saktis tu Parama Śivas*

Just as the sun cannot shine without the rays, so also Śiva doesn't exist without Śakti. Śiva is Dharmi and Śakti is Dharma. The commentator quotes a number of verses from Ambāstuti, which is a very fine collection of stotra on Devi. Obviously this poem seems to have been very popular among the Śāktas then. One of the verses says, "Devi, some adore you as Vidyā, others as ambaram and others as ānanda, and yet others as Māyā, but we adore thee as the very teacher of boundless mercy".

*Vidyām parām katicit ambaram amba kēcit
 Ānandam ēva kēcit katicit ca māyām
 Tvām viśvam Āhur aparē vayam Āmanāmaha Śākshād apāra Karuṇām gurumūrtim ēva.*

(Ambastuti-27).

Mantravāda :

The second sect among the Vāmins, layed emphasis on repetition of mantras like svāha, svadhā, vaushaṭ, vashaṭ, Humpaṭ etc. This sect consider these mantras as the form of Śakti, Śakti svarūpā. The release or final emanapation is achieved by Mantrapāśana and so they are called Mantra Vāmins.

Yantravāmi :

The third sub-sect is called Yantravāmi who adore yantras as given by the Vāmatantras and believe that final emancipation is achieved through the worship of Yantras, mystical diagrams. The followers of this school believe that without Yantras nothing can be achieved by the repetition of mantras. The Yantras confer all the desired results. All the siddhis like, Animā, Mahimā, garimā, laghimā, Isatva, Vasiatva, Prāpti, Prakaraja and others like Mōhana, Karshapa, Uccāṣana, Sthambhana, Mārana, Vidveshana, Bhēdana and enjoyment in the other worlds are obtained by the worship of Yantras. They are all the forms of Śakti and therefore the worship of Yantras are the best way to which the mantras are only the parts angas.

*Śākshāt Śakti svarūpam tat
 Yantram ēva atra Sēvate
 Tadangatvēna Mantrādi
 Sēvā tulyam ca Sammatam*

Aushadavāmi :

The fourth sect among the Śāktas consider that adoration of aushadhas, (medicines) as given by the Tantras will lead one to final bliss. All these, like Kāyakaḥ observed for a specified period, are all forms of Śakti which will destroy even the cycle of birth. By this process one obtains a shining body and even powers to move through the air. The followers of this school do not believe in the efficiency of either of mantras or Yantras.

Karmavāmi :

Karma Vāmis are the other sects who believed that everything on earth is destined and no useful purpose will be served by following the paths of Yantra, Mantra etc. This school seems to be an absolutely a pessimistic school, prescribing nothing except that the knowledge of this in effaciable destiny would ultimate bestow release.

Advaitavāmi :

The Advaitavāmins, consider Śakti as the one indivisible absolute, and the entire universe is an apparent manifestation and not a reality. The entities like Karma, Mayā, the individual, the lord, Pasu, the bondage, do not have any separate existence apart from Śakti. The followers of this school believe, that the final emancipation comes through knowledge. The belief that, unless the past action is completely exhausted, no release from bondage can be obtained, arise out of ignorance. It is possible to attain release through Jñāna.

Advaitavāmi Pakshē tu Sarvam Śakti Vivartakam Tatā Śakti Vivartēna Vinā Kinjit na drsyatē.

Dvaitavāmi :

The Dvaitavāmins, accept three entities, Śakti, the individual and the bondage. The individual soul, like Śakti is omniscient but due to its association with the beginningless impurity mala, remains ignorant. Being initiated by a competent teacher and observing the path taught by the Śakta Tantra, one will attain knowledge which will lead on to final emancipation. One may attain the same by observing either the carya, yoga or the kriyā mārga of the Śakta school. The kriyā would consist of doing pūjās to various manifestations of Śakti or Śakti Herself. In the realised state, the individual soul shines like Śakti, as a Sarvajna. This sub-sect is called Dvaita vāma siddhānta.

Misravāmi

The Misravāmins adore Śakti through liquor and meat and do pūja, hōma or japā. Śiva, his body, the concealment of knowledge, his soul etc., are all nothing his Śakti. The three entities like Śakti, pasu and pāsa, though are independent ones, yet unite and in the final stage of release become Saktyātmakas. Neither do they stand separate from Śakti nor do they become equal to Śakti but become Saktyātmaka.

Siddhantavāmi :

The Vāma Siddhantins accept the three entities Śakti, pasu and pāsa. Following the eight Āgamas like Vāma, one should accept the instruments of knowledge like perception. The one Śakti pervades all the entities. By adoring Śakti with the strength of good path, and according to the discend of Śakti nipāta, through Sāmbhavi dīksha one attains Mukti. The good path consists of worshipping that Paramesvari through knowledge or Yōga or through the adoration of various manifestations of Śakti.

All these are considered the Parināmavāda of the Śakti schools. The Śakti is the creator of the universe. She assumes thousands of forms beginning from Parāśakti and ending with Kriyāsakti. By modification of Śakti the entire sentient and unsentient beings of the universe come into being.

Saktireva Jagat Kartri Sā punah syāt Sahasrasah, Samārabhya Parāśakteh Kriyā saktyanta Bhētadah, Tadrūpa parimānēna Jagatsarvam carācaram, Yadasti sarvam tad Śakti mūrtirūpam tadā Jagat.

This summary of various sub-sects of the Vāma philosophies are from a work called Sarva Siddhānta Vivēka. It is to be noted that the commentator cites a few lines from the original Jñānavarāna vilakkam to which he gives the references from Sarvasiddhānta Viveka. So it is evident that even at the time of the original text, these sub-sects among the Vāma school were known. It is not known whether the author of the original text, Gurujñānāsambanda, knew the Sarva Siddhānta Viveka.

The commentator gives an interesting verse which defines a Śākta as one carrying sūla, kapāla, and kaṭvāṅga, and wearing ornaments made of conch shell and bones, and drinking liquor and eating meat.

Sankāstibhūshanai Yuktam Madhya Māmsam tu Sevitam Sūlam Kapālam Katvāṅgam ityetad Śākta lakshanam.

TANTRISM IN SANSKRIT WORKS—SASTRIC

ŚIVĀDVAITA OF ŚRIKAṆṬA

The Śivādvaita school of Śaiva cannon, was spearheaded by Śrikanṭa, who from the stand point of Śaiva school, interpreted the Brahmasūtras of Bādarāyaṇa, as Śankara and Rāmānuja have done earlier. His work, called Śrikanṭa Bhāshya, is an important school of the south, that calls our attention, with special reference to the concepts of Śakti.

Śrikanṭa Bhāshya has been commented upon by that versatile scholar, Appayya dīkshita, of 16th century, in his commentary Śivārkamanīdīpika. This has been studied in detail by S. Suryanarayana Sastri, in the Madras University series.¹ (Reprinted 1972). Mr. S. Sastri, discusses the similarities and dissimilarities in the approach to Vedānta sūtras between Śrikanṭa on the one hand and Śankara and Rāmānuja on the other. The date of Śrikanṭa has also been discussed in detail by the learned scholar, who assigns a probable date of early 12th century A.D.

Aupanishadī Mīmāṃsa

Śrikanṭa calls his own exposition as Aupanishadī Mīmāṃsa. According to Śrikanṭa, all the Vedāntic texts extol the Supreme nature of Brahman which is Śiva and all words like Nārāyaṇa, really stand for Śiva. His philosophy is brought out vividly in the invocatory verses. Śiva is Paramātmā, Sacchidānandarūpa. (Existence, knowledge and bliss) and he is the 'I' consciousness of the world. He creates the entire universe by his own Śakti as a painting on a wall and He is the end of all the Śāstras.

नमोऽर्हं पदार्थाय लोकानां सिद्धिहेतवे
सच्चिदानन्द रूपाय शिवाय परमात्मने १
निजशक्तिनिर्मित निश्चित जगज्ज्वाल निकुरुम्बः
स जयति शिवः परमात्मा निश्चितानमसारसर्वस्वम् २

1. Sivadvaita of Srikanta by S. Suryanarayana Sastri, Madras University, 1972.

Elucidating the same points Śrīkaṇṭha says Śiva is the nondualistic Reality, manifesting himself through Supreme Śakti as this universe of entire sentient and non-sentient beings. He stands revealed by such synonymous words, as Bhava, Śiva, Sarva, Paśupati, Parameśvara, Mahādeva, Rudra and Śambhu. By worshipping the divinities which are his partly manifestations the individuals attain supreme bliss, by his grace. This according to Śrīkaṇṭha is the message of the Upanishads ततः सकलचिदचित् प्रपञ्चाकार परमशक्ति विशिष्ट अद्वितीयवैभवस्य, सकल निगमसार सामरस्य निबान्त्य भव शिव शर्वं पशुपति परमेस्वर रुद्र शम्भुप्रभृति पर्याय वाचक शब्दसार प्रकाशित परम महिमा विसासस्य स्वसेवभूत निखिल चेतन समुपासन अनुगुण समुदित निजप्रसाद समर्पित पुरुषार्थसार्थस्य प्रतिपादकं ग्रीपनिषत् शास्त्रम् P. 71

Śivatattva

Śrīkaṇṭha holds that Vedas and Āgamas are non-different in essence and are equally authoritative. Śruti is our sole authority and source of knowledge in respect of Brahman.¹ "Brahman is the material cause and the operative cause of the universe. Brahman creates himself and transforms himself. It is a change not of Brahman but in Brahman—not of substance but of form it is a manifestation, a development from subtle to gross".

अग्मादिः अगमिष्टत्वेन ब्रह्मणि असंभवः
तादस्येन सत्तत्त्वं व्यप्यते

The nature of Brahman being the cause of the universe is called Śivatattva. Śivatattva is that which possesses the qualities like Omniscience, which are defined as Sarva-jñatva, Nityatṛptatva, Anādibodhatva, Svatantratva, Alupta, Śakṣimatva and Ananta Śaktimatva.

Five-Fold Acts

Brahman is the cause of creation, preservation, and destruction of the world and of the functions of concealment and grace in respect of the soul.

अग्न स्थितिप्रलय तिरोभाव
मनुष्यं कृत्वं सत्य P. 115

"The two last mentioned functions are distinctive of Āgamic doctrine. According to that doctrine, the soul is impure from the beginning of time, the impurity being innate as verdigis in action. The only way to get rid of it is to engage in action as one passes metal through fire in order to purify it. As action involves a cycle of birth and death, it is not likely to be undertaken unless it is presented as pleasant and attractive while the soul's own eternal perfection is concealed. The concealment of the real nature of things with a view to the ultimate good of the jīvas is called tirobhāva. It is an expression of Lord's energy (Śakti) though in view of the impurities with which it is associated, through which it operates, and to the removal of which it is directed, that energy is itself known as an impurity (mala). When by successive performance of action, and enjoyment of the fruit there of, the soul is purified and made fit for release; the Lord bestows grace on it and helps it on to the final realisation of what is essentially his own. The creation, preservation and destruction of the world results thus from the concealing activity of Brahman and they cease when the bestowal of grace supervenes. Tirobhāva and Anugraha are the two termini without which the intervening process have as such no significance; and the Āgamic recognition of these two function's is pressed into service by Śrīkaṇṭha in the interpretation of the Janmādi Sūtra".¹

1. Sivadvaita of Srikanta, op. cit., P. 91.

This Pañca kritya concept is reflected in Śiva Nāṭarāja images wherein his inherent Śakti is also portrayed. 'Śrīkaṇṭha says the Lord, through his Icchā Śakti desired, may I become many; by Jñāna Śakti he considered the means and instruments necessary; with Kriyā Śakti he created the universe which is like a picture painted on the wall.

Śrīkaṇṭha on Śakti

"Śrīkaṇṭha rises to heights of poetic expression when he starts to write of the glory of Parā Śakti. She is of the Lord, of his very nature, figuring as his wisdom, strength and activity. She is the form of the intelligent and non-intelligent worlds that express his glory; she is existence, knowledge and bliss; She is unrestricted and undefined. It is She, indeed, that constitutes the forms and the qualities of Brahman. But for her, neither the six attributes nor the eight names would be predictable of Śiva".²

According to Śrīkaṇṭha, the concept of innate and undivided Śakti of Brahman are gleaned from the Upanishadic sayings as

तुरीयं इमं लोकं ईक्षत ईक्षणीयुः जननीयुः यः सर्वान् लोकान् ईक्षत ईक्षणीयुः परम शक्तिभिः

Alupta Śaktimatva is defined as

स्वाभाविकशक्तिमत्त्वं असुप्त शक्तिमत्त्वं
अपरिच्छिन्न शक्तिविशिष्टत्वं अनन्तशक्तिमत्त्वं P. 124

We have shown from the above citations that Śakti is an essential Principle, the undifferentiated, all knowing Supreme power of Śiva who is mainly responsible for the creation of the world. The mode of attaining final emancipation is achieved through Bhakti Jñāna. Except in minor details, Śivādvaita of Śrīkaṇṭha is in no way different from that Śaiva Siddhāntins. It is the reason why some later commentators like Śivajñāna yogin claimed Śrīkaṇṭha as a Siddhāntin.

Chit Śakti

However there are certain differences in the doctrinal approach to Chit-Śakti and Jivan Mukti, which we may note in passing. According to Śrīkaṇṭha, the world of both

1. Sivadvaita of Srikanta, op cit., P. 138.

2. Ibid., P. 160.

intelligent and non-intelligent beings, is the result of the transformation of the Lord. That is there is no difference between Śakti and Śaktimān. The non intelligent world consisting of bodies, instruments, and objects of enjoyment is derived from the same principle as the enjoying souls. In support of his Śakti concept, Śrīkaṇṭha quotes the following Śruti and epic texts.

परा यस्य शक्तिः विविधैव श्रूयते
स्वाभाविकी ज्ञान बल क्रिया च Sveṭ 6.8
एक एव रुद्रो न द्वितीयाय तन्वुः
य इमान् लोकान् ईशत ईशनीभिः Sveṭ 3.2
शक्तयो अस्य जगत् कृत्स्नं
शक्तिमान् तु महेश्वरः
शक्तिः तु शक्तिमत् रूपात्
व्यतिरेकं न नश्यति ।
सादात्म्यं मनयोः नित्यं
बन्धि बाह्यकयोः इव
शक्ति शक्तिमतोः यस्मात्
अभेदः सर्वदा स्थितः ।
पराज्य विविधा शक्तिः
प्रबोधानन्दरूपिणी
एकेन एकस्वरूपेण
शक्ति भानोः इवप्रभा

All the śruti, smṛiti, epic, puranic and other texts, testify that Paramaśakti, is the form of (swarūpa) and quality (guṇa) of Śiva. She is of the form of the entire sentient and non-sentient beings of this world; (Sakala chidachit prapañca mahā vibhūti rūpa). She is the knower of everything and the embodiment of bliss, unbounded by time, space, etc. and is the inherent power of the Lord.

श्रुति स्मृति इतिहास पुराण अभियुक्त शक्ति प्रामाण्यात्
सकल चिदचित् प्रपञ्च महाविभूतिरूपा महा संबिदानन्दसत्ता
स्वाभाविकी परम शक्तिः
पर ब्रह्मणः शिवस्य स्वरूपं च गुणः च

Thus there is no Śiva without Śakti and no Śakti without Śiva; without this Supreme Śakti, there is no all pervasive knowledge for Brahman. That He is Omnipotent, the cause of all becomings, the leader of everything; to be adored by all, the bestower of grace to all and the cause of all puruṣārthas, cannot happen without this Supreme Śakti.

तत्त्व्यतिरेकेण परब्रह्मणः
सर्वज्ञत्व सर्वशक्तित्व सर्वकारणत्व
सर्वनिमित्तत्व सर्व उपास्यत्व
सर्वानुग्राहकत्व सर्व पुरुषार्थहेतुत्व
आदिकं सर्वगतत्वं च न संभवति
किं च महेश्वर शिव महादेव
रुद्रादि परमात्म्यानां अभिधेयत्वं च न संभवति P. 302

Chidambaram

However there is one point, on which Śrīkaṇṭha has thrown valuable light so far as this study is concerned and that is with reference to the word Chidambaram. The place of the cosmic dancer Naṭarāja is called Chidambaram, and the particular form of dancing Śiva, so familiar to students of South Indian Bronzes, is called Ānanda Tāṇḍava. How these words Chidāmbaram and Ānanda Tāṇḍava are derived, is interesting field of enquiry. Ananda Coomaraswamy has immortalised this form in his 'Dance of Śiva'. The clue to the association of the word Chidambaram and Ānanda Tāṇḍava is cited by Śrīkaṇṭha in his bhāṣya, which shows that the concepts, evolved from vedāntic doctrines.

Chidambaram is the centre of Śaiva faith ever since Śaivism became the greatest religion of the South. The dancing form of Śiva assumed supreme significance gradually and for this popularity, apart from the Bhakti hymns, the philosophic doctrines expounded by eminent Śaiva teachers especially from 9th-10th centuries were also responsible to a great extent. The concepts thus propounded by the Śaiva philosophers were gradually associated with the form of the dancer. The one such association is the pañcakrīyas, the five-fold actions of Śiva. These were associated with Naṭarāja; the creation represented by damaruka, sustenance by the abhaya arm; dissolution by the fire in his arm; the act of concealment by the trampling of apasmāra (dwarf) with right leg; and the bestowal of grace with the lifted left leg and the gajahasta. This is a clear association of concepts with the existing form. There are four arms each with a distinct pose; together with the two legs, there are six parts of the Lord to which five acts are to be accommodated. We find the lifted leg and the left arm together indicating the fifth act. Obviously the Pañca krīyas, were associated with this figure.

Chidambaram-Vedāntic

The word Chidāmbaram is clearly made of two words Chid and Ambalam (Ākāśa). This is beautifully explained in terms of Śruti by Śrīkaṇṭha. The Śruti says Brahman is Ānanda (Ānandam Brahma). Brahman has ākāśa as its body, ākāśa sārīram Brahma. The śruti reads

आकाशं सरीरं ब्रह्म । सत्यात्मं प्राणारामं
मन आनन्दं । शान्तिं समुद्रं नमस्तम् । p. 122

Śrīkaṇṭha explains ākāśa as Brightness which is Chidambara.

आकाशत्वे इति आकाशः
प्रकाशः चिदम्बरं उच्यते P, 122

Again the Supreme Śakti, who is Paraprakṛitī, who manifests herself as various entities of the universe is the Chit Śakti of the Lord which is Chidambaram.

परप्रकृतित्वं चिदाकाशस्य । “सर्वानि ह व इमानि भूतानि आकाशादेव
समुत्पद्यन्ते । आकाशं प्रत्यस्तं वाप्ति ।
आकाशो ह वै नाम रूपयोः निबन्दिता”
इत्यादि श्रुतिसिद्धम् P. 123

Further the śruti says "all these beings appear from Ākāśa and disappear into that ākāśa. It is ākāśa that gives name and form to these being". Chidākāśa is Paraprakṛiti.

सत्त्वारम् सत्ताख्यं । प्राणारामं
प्राणस्सकलारामं भूता चिदम्बर
प्रकृतिः उच्यते । स्वस्य भूतायां तस्यां
आरामः यस्य तत् प्राणारामम् P. 123

Brahman is the very existence Sattārūpam. Prāṇārāmam means the prāṇa which is the support of all beings which again is nothing but chidākāśa or Chit Śakti.

यन आनन्दं मनसि एव आनन्दः
यस्य न बाह्यकरणे तत् मन आनन्दम् P. 123

Bliss is obtained in mind for Brahman without any external instruments. Here also the word Ānanda stands for Chidambara Prakṛiti because ākāśa according to śruti, is a synonym of ānanda.

अनापि आनन्द इति चिदम्बर प्रकृतिः उच्यते
तथा न भ्रूयते । को ह्येव अनात् कः प्राप्यात्
अदेव आकाशाः आनन्दः नस्यात् इति
तान्तिः समुद्रं सिवता सम्यग् ।
अमृतं अनादि मुक्तं ॥ P. 123

From the above discussions and citations it would be clear that Chit Śakti played an important role in the concepts of Chidambaram and Ānanda Tāṇḍava. The Chit Śakti, is Brightness, the support of the universe and is the embodiment of Bliss. All these ideas were associated with the Cosmic dancer with whom the five fold acts were also associated. Thus the philosophic doctrines associated with the form of dance of Śiva, assumes preeminent position.

ĀGAMAS

Āgamas constitute the most important group of literature, that deal with the worship in and the philosophy of, the temples of South India. All the Āgamas are referred to as Tantras (Sometimes Mahātantras) in the respective texts themselves, which goes to suggest that these two terms are synonyms. Volumes of literature are available on the origin and development of Tantric literature.

The Āgamas are generally divided into Śaiva Āgamas and Vaishṇava Āgamas. The Śākta Āgamas also constitute a separate body of literature though in the South, this group of literature seems to have been closely associated with the Śaiva school. We have precluded the study of Vaishṇava Āgamas in this enquiry, since that calls for an elaborate and independent study. However we do draw from them to complete the story of Śakti cult, wherever necessary.

1. Brahmasūtra bāshya, Śrīkaṇṭha ācharya (Sanskrit quotations from the above work-) Nirṇaya Sagar Edition, Bombay, 1918.

Mahā Āgamas and Upa-Āgamas

The Śaiva Āgamas are divided into principal texts and secondary texts; principal texts being twenty eight in number and the secondary 207,¹ though the number of the secondary texts vary. According to tradition Kāmikāgama is the earliest.

Parā and Aparā Vidyās

The Kāmika has an interesting passage in which it is said that there were two originally, kinds of knowledge one supreme (Parā) and the other transitory (aparā). The one that reveals the ever shining knowledge of Śiva is considered Parājñāna. Supreme knowledge. The other ones, like the Vedas, which deal with the nature of individual souls and the bondage are transitory knowledge aparājñāna.

अथवा मूत् द्विषा ज्ञानं अधिकारि विवेकतः
परापर भेदेन पति परबार्ध वर्धकम्
शिवप्रकाशकं ज्ञानं शिवज्ञानं परं स्मृतम्
वेषाक्षपर विज्ञानं पशुपाशार्ध वर्धकम्

Kāmika; Vyasa Vidvad Sadas, Malar, p. 72.

It is interesting to see in this saying even Vedas being relegated to a secondary position.

The twenty eight principal texts are also divided into supreme (Parā) and secondary (aparā) texts.

1) Kāmika 2) Yogaja 3) Cintya 4) Kāraṇa 5) Ajita 6) Dipta 7) Sūkshma 8) Sahasra 9) Amsumān and 10) Suprabheda are said to be the Supreme (parā) Āgamas. The other eighteen as 1) Vijaya 2) Nisvāsa 3) Svāyambhuva 4) Āgneya 5) Vira 6) Raurava 7) Makuṣa 8) Vimala 9) Candrajñāna 10) Mukhabimba 11) Prōtgitā 12) Lalita 13) Siddha 14) Santāna 15) Sarvokta 16) Parameśvara 17) Kiraṇa and 18) Vātula are considered (aparā) secondary texts.

Śaiva and Raudra Āgamas

These eighteen texts are also said to belong to the Raudra class while the other ten are said to belong to the Śaiva class.² The Kāmika gives a different account. It says the twenty eight texts constitute the Śaiva class and the rest Raudra class. The Āgamas Śaiva, Pāsupata, Soma and Lākula among which the Śaiva is the most benign path while the rest belong to the wild path (raudra).

Śaivam Pāsupatam Somam Lākulam ca Caturvidham
Teshu Śaivam Param Saumyam Raudram Pāsupatādhikam
Kāmikādyashtavimsati Tantrāni Śaivamiti Smritam
Tadeva Saumyam Ākhyātam Siddhāntam tu Tadeva tu
Tadanyat Raudram Ākhyātam Tantram Pāsupatādhikam

1. Vyasa Vidvad Sadas—Souvenir, Madras 1968. Page 71.

2. Ibid. Page 72.

Āgamas—Vedic or Non-Vedic

The Kāmika gives another definition which goes against its own stand mentioned earlier. It says that all the twenty eight Tantras are the essence of Vedas

*Vedasārāthmakam tantram
Tasmāt Vaidikam ācaret
Vedāntārthamayam Jñānam
Siddhāntam Paramam Subham*

According to Makūṭāgama, the Raudra class is considered transitory (aparā), because they are non-vedic in character.

*Śrutyuktācāra bāhyatvāt aparam Raudram ucyate
Vaidikācāra sambandāt
Saumyam śreṣṭham ity smritam*

The Vedic and non-vedic nature, are so badly mixed up in these texts, that it would require an independent study to ascertain its true nature. We cite only a few example below. We have noticed earlier that Kāmikāgama considers Vedic knowledge as aparā and āgamic as parā but later the same text says Āgamas are the essence of the Vedas. It again says the vedic rites should be given precedence over āgamic rites.

Vaidikam tu purā kr̥tvā tatas Saivam samācaret.

We have seen Virāgama being considered a Raudra class, which is non-Vedic; but Virāgama itself asserts that Śaivas should do everything as prescribed in Vedas.

Vedoktaiḥ atha mantraiḥ Saivas sarvam Samācaret

Evidently the available texts of these works have many interpolations, inconsistent with their nature.

Āgamas—Four Sections

The Āgamas are divided into four sections as (pādas) Cāryā, Kriyā, Yoga and Jñāna. In some instances the Jñānapāda is also called Vidyāpāda. The Āgamic verses are also called sūtras. All the twenty eight principal Śivāgamas have not so far been published. Even among the manuscripts so far obtained some parts are found wanting. However the text so far published do give a general picture of the nature of these class of texts.

The Caryāpāda of the texts deal with the rites and code of daily life of the individual, like his personal cleanliness, the daily and the periodical ceremonies one has to perform etc.

In the caryāpāda, the followers of Śaiva path are classified into Deśika, Mantra-vritti, Putraka, and Samayi. Deśika is the teacher of Śivadharmā. Mantra Vritti to one who is ever engaged in the recitation of mantras.¹ They are again divided into Vratins and non-Vratins i.e. those who have taken vow, either wear matted hair or shave their heads. However Mrgendra Āgama prohibits, sudras, fools, madmen, women and the like, wearing matted locks. The hairs are grouped into 38, 36, 5, 9 or 8 and matted. The texts also detail the process of making matted locks.

Those who take vows for a limited period are called Bhautikavratins and those who take vows till the end of their lives are called Naishtikavratins. For the Vratins certain prohibitions are prescribed. Both the Bhautika and Naishṭika Vratins should not eat meat, not drink liquor. They should avoid sexual inter-course, and should sleep on the ground only. They can take care of their personal belongings like rosary danda, Kamandalu etc, but should avoid meeting women in lonely places, and should not listen to music or see dance performances by women. They should also avoid wearing garlands or cosmetics. When a Bhautika Vratin has completed his period of vow he can duly engage himself with woman.² The caryapāda goes on, to detail the various Śaiva rites, the conduct of the teacher and the taught. It also prescribes the rites of purification by those who sverve from the path.

Kriyapāda

The most important part of the Āgamas, is perhaps the Kriyapāda, which deals with the rites of temple from selection of site to the installation of the deity and from daily rites to the end of all festive rites in detail. This part consists of architectural details, iconometry, iconographic descriptions and the daily and occasional rites and festivals.

Worships are divided into personal worship (ātmārtha pūja) and worship for others (parārtha pūja). Each pūja begins with the five purificatory rites called panca suddhis. (1) Ātma suddhi (self purification) (2) Bhūta suddhi (purifying the seat) (3) Dravya suddhi (purification of objects used in worship; (4) Mantra suddhi (Purifying the chants), and (5) Bimba suddhi (purifying the image).

The whole process is a psychological atunement to the divine nature of the worship. In most of the Śaiva texts, worship in five circles (pañcavarana) are preferred, but in other forms of worship like Śākta, the nine circle (Navavarana pūja) seems to have been popular.³

The worship begins with the offering of five spheres (or seats) called panca āsanas. They are Anantāsana, Simhāsana, Yogāsana, Padmāsana and Vimalāsana, one placed over the other. Each seat has particular deities and the supreme Lord resides above all these seats. The five seats are included in the 36 tattvas beginning from prithvī-ādhāraśakti and ending with Śiva tattva-Kuṭila Śakti.

The Supreme Lord who resides above these spheres is the formless Supreme (nishkala) who is now invoked with form (Sakala), as chants (mantra sarira). Various parts like head, hands etc. are now attributed to him by meditation. First they are conceived as five major parts, as head, neck, chest, naval and leg. To these parts are attributed the five Śaktis or kālas; from foot to knee is attributed Nivṛtti kāla; upto the naval pratishṭā kāla; from the naval part to the heart is Vidyā kāla; upto the neck is Sānti kāla and above Sāntyārūta kāla.

1. Mrgendra Āgama—Pondicherry 1962. Page 207.

2. Ibid. Page 213.

3. Vyasa Vidvad Souvenir. Madras. 1963. Page 60.

After this kalā nyāsa the subtle parts are invoked with 38 mahāmantras. These are the attribution of sacred syllables to the centres of six psychic powers such mūlādhāra svādhishṭhāna etc.

In Mūlādhāra is seated Mahāganapati with his consorts; in Svādhishṭhāna is Brahma with Gayatri and Savitri; Vishnu with Śrī and Bhū, is seated in the next centre called Mani pūraka; Paramesvara is seated with Gauri and Ambika in the next centre called Anāhata. The next centre Visuddhi is the seat of Paramesvara with Unmādini and Vākvādini and in the last seat Ānjā, is seated Paramaśiva with Parāśakti.

After invoking the Lord in the gross and the subtle forms his weapons are meditated upon. These invocations are performed simultaneously with mantras (chants) kriyas (actions) and Chayanas (meditations).¹

This process of psychic transformation is essential for both personal worship and worship for others.

The Kriyāpādas give the definition of main and secondary icons, the process of making them, the rites connected with their individual installation and other rites. The preparation of sacrificial altars, connected with each rite are also given in detail in these texts.

Yogapāda

The Yogapāda of the Āgamas deals with control of individual body and mind, and channelling them towards the Supreme Lord. This consists of the eightfold path of the Yogic school. This process is also called ādhāra and ādheya, ādhāra constituting the first six parts and ādheya the last two parts of yoga. The eightfold path is Yama, niyama, Āsana, Prāṇāyāma, pratyāhāra, dhāraṇa, dhyāna and Samādhi. We need not go into details of this process since there is not much difference between the Śaiva school and the yoga school of Patanjali in this aspect.

Jñānapāda

The Jñānapāda of the Āgamas deal with the nature of creation, the knowledge of the Lord, the individual soul, the nature of the bondage and the process of attaining liberation. This would be the important portion dealing with the philosophy of the Śaiva school. As we have mentioned earlier this part is called vidyā pāda as well.

Karmānta, Jñānānta

It is interesting to mention that in some later texts the Āgamas are divided into only two parts as Karmānta and Jñānānta, a distinction clearly imitating the vedic divisions as Karma kānda and Jñāna Kānda.

1. Ibid. Page 60-65.

Much has been written on the origin of the Āgamic cults. S. Suryanarayana Sastri struck what seems to be an acceptable course on this subject. "Assuming that the non sacrificial Āgamic cult was neither earlier than nor contemporaneous with, but subsequent to, the Vedic cult, the movement away from sacrifices may well have been due to a realisation of the impermanence and the comparatively small worth of the fruit there of, a realisation which certainly came to the aupanishada seers. The weakness of the followers of the Āgamic cult would then be manifest not in the revolt against sacrifice but in the variety of spiritual consolation sought that being so to speak, externally centered, while the aupanishada teaching was self centered. It is also possible to contend, with some measure of reason, that the Āgamic cult which was that of the priestly classes, officiating for themselves or for others, were both indigenous that they existed and grew up side by side from the earliest times without any extraneous influence, and that the distinction between the two in no sense be racial"¹.

But as they exist today the 28 principal Āgamas admit that they are the essence of vedas and in that sense are essentially vedic in nature. Most of the chants they specify are vedic mantras and their terminology is nothing but vedic. In spite of such associations, there have been at every stage attempts to brand the Āgamic schools as non-vedic by the pauranic and purely vedic followers. As a result certain Āgamic schools assimilated many of the vedic rites and began to condemn other Āgamic schools as non-vedic. Some Āgamic statements, claiming that they are superior to Vedas, are not wanting. This clearly indicates a continuous process of assimilation and division between the vedic and Āgamic cults.

Vedic School Relegated

During the centuries when great number of temples were being erected especially by the rulers themselves either as a mark of their victories or as an act of pious dedication, the Āgamic school had greater and closer contact with the ruling and wealthy class, slowly relegating the vedic school into the background.

In the Āgamas, the Śakti concepts are to be seen broadly in three forms. (1) In the description of various images, many Śakti images are included (2) in the Jñānapāda while discussing the philosophy of the school, the nature of Śakti and her relationship with the Supreme etc. are detailed, and (3) in the rituals, especially with kalāsas (water vessels), Śakti is dealt with separately.

It is again needless to go into these three broad divisions of Śakti concepts in all the available text but we will only indicate here their general nature.

Manonmani—Kumbhas—Śivakumbha and Vardhani

Pouring of sacred water from auspicious water-vessels form an important rite in temple rituals. These rites are called Kumbhābhisheka and Kalasa snapana. The deity is invoked in the water vessel and while pouring the water on the image, the respective power of the deity is transferred to the image. In Saiva rites the principal water-vessel is called Śiva Kumbha, which would be placed in the centre, wherein the Supreme Lord as Sadāsiva is invoked. As mentioned earlier, Śiva is accompanied by his Śakti in every aspect. A separate water vessel slightly smaller in size than the Śiva Kumbha, is placed to the left of the main vessel. This second vessel is called Vardhani. In this vessel, the Supreme Śakti as Manonmani is invoked. Around the Śiva Kumbha and Vardhini, are placed eight smaller vessels in which the Vidyēśvaras are invoked. These are placed in a specially decorated platform under a special pavilion. These water vessels are filled with sacred water and carry mango leaves, a coconut and kūrcha of dharbha grass. Externally they are decorated with cotton threads and new clothes. How these Kumbhas play their role in temple consecratory rites, is given in Rauravāgama.¹

1. Sivadvaita of Srikanṭha—Suryanarayana Sastri. Madras. 1972. Page 72-73.

Lingaprathishṭā

In the installation of Śivalinga the following process is prescribed. The Linga, carved to size and cleaned according to the rites is placed in the pavilion. The linga part would be kept lying with its head in the east and face down. It should be covered with red cloth. The Śiva Kumbha is placed near the head of the linga and to the left of it should be placed Vardhani and around them the eight water vessels. The mūlamantra is invoked in Śiva Kumbha and the Supreme Lord as Sarvesvara is meditated upon. In the principal Kumbha Sadāsiva is invoked. Sadāsiva is conceived as standing on a lotus seat with five heads, and ten arms, beautified with fine cloth and ornaments. He holds in his right arms Sula, axe, sword, vajra and fire while the left hands hold pāsa, ankuśa snake, bell and abhaya. He wears *jatā makuta*s and flower garlands. (The Sūkshmagama gives the same form of Sadāsiva with slight variations in the weapons held in arms. According to it, sūla, Axe, vajra, sword, and abhaya, are held in the right arms while in the left pāsa, ankusa fire, sword and varada are shown.)

In the Vardhani, Manonmani Śakti is invoked. She is personified as three eyed, four armed, benign Goddess with prominent breasts, thighs and organ; she is golden in colour and wears kirta makuta. Bedecked with jewelled ornaments she wears silken garments. She stands on a lotus pedestal in tribhanga pose. In the front arms she holds abhaya and varada poses while in the rear arms she holds lotus and lilly. The Kāranāgama gives the same description in addition to a two armed form of the Devi in which she is said to carry lilly and hanging arm.

Vidyēśvaras are invoked in the other Kumbhas. All these rites are accompanied by offerings in fire altars. Appropriate altars are made and to the chanting of mantras, ghee is poured into the fire. The fire itself is called Śivagni. Śiva and other deities are to be invoked in the fire altar also. The Diptāgama gives a detailed description of various deities constituting the five circles (pañcāvaranās). The Āgamas prescribe various āhutis, the offerings in fire. An important āhuti is done with ghee to the chanting of the Vedic mantra.

1. Rauravagama Ed. by N.R. Bhat. Pondicherry.

*Trayambakam Yajāmahe
Sugandhim Pushti Vardhanam
Urvārukam iva bandanāt Mṛtyōr mukshya māṃ pāt.*

This offering is repeated one hundred times.

The Dīptāgama states that offering should be made in the altar with the Gauri Brahma angavidyā. It is the āhuti with the mantra, Gaurimimāya.

Gauri mimāya Salilāni Takshati

(Taitrīya arnyaka 1.1.37).

This also is accompanied by the Gauri Gāyatri which is given as *Aum Mahādevyai ca vidmahē

Rudrapatni ca dhīmahi
Tanno Gauri praśdayāt*

(Yogaja T. No. 161 p. 38)¹.

Thus in every aspect of the rite, Śakti is given equal importance with Śiva. The final or what is called full āhuti is a vedic rite.

After this fire offering is over, the linga is carried to the accompaniment of music, into the sanctum. The supporting slab called ādhārasilā is put in position. Over this are placed precious gems, golden flowers etc. and then the linga set in position, and cemented.

Śakti Transferred

From the sacrificial pavilion the Śivakumbha, Vardhani and other water vessels are brought in procession to the sanctum and placed before the linga. Again Sadāśiva Manonmani and Vidyēśas are worshipped at this stage. By meditation the bljaksharas are transferred from the kalasas (water vessels) to the linga. When this has been effected for Sadāśiva, Manonmani, Śakti is transferred from the Vardhani vessel to the piṭha in the left. Likewise Vidyēśas are also to be done around the linga piṭha. Then the water from the water vessels is poured; the Śiva Kumbha water on the Linga, the Vardhani water on the piṭha and water from other vessels around the piṭha. While Rauravāgama speaks of the installation of the linga and the Yoni piṭha, in two different chapters, *Ajitāgama*² deals with them in the same chapter.

Yoni Piṭha Prathishta

Since the Yoni piṭha of the linga, is the embodiment of Śakti, it receives special attention. A separate pavilion is erected with a pedestal where the Yoni piṭha is placed after being duly carved and purified. In front of it is placed the main water vessel pradhāna Kumbha with eight vessels Kumbhas around it, altogether being nine. In the principal vessel is invoked Gauri and in the other vessels, Vāma, Jyēshṭha, Raudri, Kāla Vikarani, 1. Ibid. Page 33. Foot Note.

2. Ajitogama—Pondicherry.

Balavikarini, Balapramathini and Sarvabhūta damani are invoked. In this rite we find all the vessels are invoked with only the Śaktis.

The offerings in the Vedic altar are performed separately for this rite as well. The altar would be in the form of a Yoni. There the Vedic chant Gauri mimāya is chanted and offerings made. The puṇāhuti (the final full offering) is made to the accompaniment of Gauri Gāyatri as

Aum Mahādevyai ca Vidmahe
Rudra patniyai ca dhīmahe
Tanno Gauri pracodayāt

yogaja. T. No. 161. P. 38.

Then the piṭha and kumbhas are taken into the sanctum after worshipping Gauri, Vāma and others; the piṭha is lifted and inserted into the linga through the head. After it has been put in position the biṣṭaksharas (sacred syllables) are meditated upon and are transferred to the Yoni piṭha from the vessel.

Consecration of Iccā, Jñāna and Kriyā Śaktis.

The Kāmikāgama gives an interesting additional rite at this stage. The Yoni piṭha of a linga consists of three parts, the lower part with an inverted lotus; a central part like Kumuda and the upper part with the upturned lotus. Through meditation the invocation of the three Śaktis, Iccā Śakti, Kriyā Śakti and Jñāna Śakti is made in order. That is the reason why the Śakti called is here Tattava Tattvesi and Mūrti Murtisvari. (Raurava p. 32.) Then the water from the principal vessel is poured over the piṭha followed by the other vessels.

Thus the concept of the Principal Śakti of Śiva, and the other manifesting Śaktis like Iccā, Jñāna and Kriyā are consecrated in the linga and Yonipitha.

Kālasa Snapanas

We have seen the invocation of Śakti in the consecratory rites of linga and its Yonipitha, with the water vessel called Vardhani. After consecration, special oblations are performed on select festival days. These consists of doing abhisheka with many kālasa water, the number of Kālasas varying according to the importance of the festival or the ability of the Yajamāna; from 8 Kālasas, to as many as one thousand and eight Kālasas are used in such rites. In all these cases, the Principal vessels are Śiva Kumbha and Vardhani, representing Paramesvara and Gauri as mentioned earlier.

Śivakumbha should be four times the size of the ordinary Kālasa and the Vardhani, two times. If the Śivakumbha and the Vardhani are made of gold, the other vessels should be of silver. If they are of Silver, other Kālasas should be made of copper and if the main two are made of copper, the others should be made of clay. The Kumbhas and Kālasas are filled with fragrant water duly filtered and then covered. In the Śivakumbha. Five precious gems (Pancarātnas) should be placed while in the Vardhani should be placed gold leaves. After performing homas in fire altar, Śiva is meditated upon in the Śivakumbha. He wears Jatāmakuta and crescent moon. Sambhu, white in colour is three-eyed Lord, carrying mṛga, parasu, abhaya and varada in four arms

*Svetam trilocanam Sambhum Jatāmakuta Samyutam
Candrāvayava lakshmānam Sarvābharana bhūṣhanam
Caturbhujam prasannāsyam Varadābhaya hastakam Krishnaparasu samyuktam dhyātva ca āvahanādibhih*

(Ajite—Kriya 29-109).

This is followed by an invocation of Devi as Gauri. 'She is two armed, beautiful in all her limbs; adorned with jewels and is golden in colour'

*Hemavarṇām dvinetram ca Pūrṇa caṇdra nibhānanām dvibhujām Sarvahradyāngim sarvābharana bhūṣhitām
Vardhanyām tu yajet gaurīm
Svanāmapāda mantratah¹*

For both the Kumbhas, the mudra called Kalakarni is offered. Lingamudra is offered for Śivakumbha and Manorama mudra for the Gauri kumbha. Again Surabhi mudra is shown for both the Kumbhas. In the abhisheka, the Śivakumbha water is poured over the linga and Vardhani water over the piṭha, followed by water from other kālasas.²

Sruk as Śakti

The concept of Śakti is also carried to sacrificial laddles called Sruk and Sruva. In these laddles the three tattvas called ātma, vidyā and Śiva are consecrated. The Sruk is conceived of as Śakti and the Sruva as Sambhu.

Sruči Saktim Sruve Sambhum Vinyaset ca Kramena vai³

(Ajita, Kriya—21-78).

Gauri

The installation of Supreme Śakti as Gauri is dealt with in Raurava, Amsumadā-gama, Acintyavisvādhakhyā, Kāmika, Kārana, Yogaja, Sahasra, and Suprebhedā Āgamas.

Vira, Yoga and Krama Śaktis

The Rauravagama classifies the Gauri images under three classes as Vira, Yoga and Krama. When Gauri is installed separately (standing) it is called the Vira class (or Kevala). When it is installed with the image of Śiva, it is considered of the Yoga class; when installed in the prakara, sleeping chamber, or as a processional deity, it is called

1. Ibid.—Kriyapada 20; 100

2. Ibid. Chapter 29.

3. Ibid. 21 : 73.

the Krama class. The Amsumadbhedā divides the images under two classes as Svatantra and Kevala. The image having its own secondary deities (Parivāra) is called Svatantra (also called Vira) and the one devoid of parivāras called Kevala. The Kāmikāgama divides it yet another way. The Devi images are classified under Vira, Bhoga and Yoga varieties. Vira is of the Svatantra class. Yoga is that which has the pitha and Bhoga is that which is accompanied by other images. The Suprebhedāgama has a different classification.

According to the Raurava Āgama, Vira class of images should be in samapāda while yoga and krama classes should be in tribhanga pose. The description of Devi in Raurava runs as follows; standing with two arms and two eyes; she wears Karandamakuta or Kesabandha; lotus or lilly in the right, while the left is hanging. An alternative description in the same Āgama says that the Devi would carry lilly or lotus in both the arms. Virāgama also gives the same description.¹

Gaurīprathistā

For the installation of the Devi image a special mandapa is erected in front of the main shrine or the shrine of the Devi. The sculpture is placed after due purificatory rites. By the side of its head, the Gaurīkumbha; which is the main vessel pradhānakumbha is placed; around it are placed eight Kumbhas for Vāma, Jyeshtha, Raudri and other Śaktis.

The Kāranāgama prescribes that the Gaurī Kumbha should be placed to the right of the image. In it are to be placed golden lotuses, The form of Gaurī should be meditated and invoked in the vessel. Around the Gaurī Kumbha are to be placed eight Kumbhas for eight Śaktis. Their respective bijāksharas are to be invoked in each and then the mudras, viz Mukuli, Padmamudra and Bimbamudra are to be shown.

This is followed by homa in the altar Kunda (Yoni Kunda). The Samit homa is performed with Gaurī Gayatrī; the ghṛta homa with the mantra, Gaurī mimāya; caru homa with sikhāmantra; each homa is to be done one hundred times.

The Kāranāgama states that Devi standing on a red lotus is to be propitiated in the centre of the altar.

Samit homa with Sadyojāta hymn
Ghṛta homa with Gaurī mimāya hymn
Caru homa with Aghora hymn
Lāja homa with Vāma hymn
Tila homa with Astra hymn Sarshapa homa with Kavaca hymn, and Tila homa with Pancama hymn.

Each one should be offered one hundred, fifty or twentyfive times. This is to be followed by twentyfive āhutis with them antra-Gaurīmimāya; then one hundred āhutis are done with Gaurībija. After these fire offerings, the individual parts of the image are to be touched. Slight variations are noticed in Virāgama.

1. Rauravagama—Kriyapada 31 : 5—8v.

Rauravāgama, states that holding each limb of the image, ten āhutis are to be performed and this is called sparsāhuti, Suprabhedāgama gives the Gauri Gāyatri as

Ganāmbikāyai Vidmahe

Mahātapāyai dhīmahi

Tanno Gauri pracodayāt

which is at variance with the Gauri gayatri mentioned earlier.

For purposes of installation, the final oblation āhuti is performed the next day, with Gauri Gāyatri mantra. Then the image is taken inside the sanctum to the chanting of music and dance. After the image has been set in position, the Gauri vessel and the other vessels are brought in; the Devi is propitiated, the bljas are transferred from the sacred vessel to the heart of the image by meditation; The respective Kalās are invoked in the image and finally the sacred water from the vessel is poured over the image. This is followed by regular archanas, and food offerings.

It is of interest to note that while in the installation of linga and other images, the Sivakumbha, finds the principal place, in the installation of Gauri, it is not at all brought into use. We have already noticed that Vardhani vessel, standing for Sakti is an invariable necessity along with Sivakumbha.

After due consecration and worships are completed, a special invocatory verse is given in the Kāmikāgama which runs as follows. "O Goddess, be pleased to reside in this shrine, so long as the sun, moon and the earth lasts."

Yāvat candras ca Sūryas ca

Yāvat tiṣṭhati medini

Tāvat atra ivayā Devi

Sihātavyam iha mandire¹

(Kāmika II 44 86-96).

Kalyāṇa Karma

Another important aspect of this Gauri installation is also worth recording. The Raurava, Kāmika, Virāgama and Suprabhedāgama prescribe the performance of marriage rites to the image as per Vivāha vidhi. The Rauravāgama simply enjoins Kalyāṇa, according to marriage rites.

Kalyāṇam Kāravet dhīmān

vivāha vidhi mārgatah

(Kriya 31-47)²

The Kāmika also states that 'then marriage rites are to be performed' but it also gives another interesting information that if the image is to be worshipped as the principal deity (and not as a secondary to Siva) then the marriage rite should not be performed.

Tatah Kalyāṇa Karma syāt Caturte Karmavit tatah

Devyas svayam pradhānayas Sahajāyās ca Varjayet

1. Kamikagama—II 44 : 86-96.

2. Rauravagama—Kriya—36 : 295-300.

Karma Vaivāhikam Viprah Prateshṭaivam Samirita

The Amsumadbhedā gives however the complete marriage rites. Umā and Rudra should be placed in the pavilion (It does not specify whether it means processional images, vessels or what other symbols would stand for the two deities). They should be beautifully decorated with garments and ornaments. The Ācārya should consider himself as Brahma and arrange for the fire offerings. Vishnu should be invoked, Umā should be made to stand to the left of Siva and Vishnu should give Uma in marriage by pouring water. She should be given in the right hand of Siva with the Biḷa mantra. On the left should be placed, a stone, with Gauri Gāyatrī hymn, Siva should hold the foot of Devi and place it on the stone. Then lāja homa is to be performed with Siva mantra. In the Vīrāgama also this rite is detailed.

This marriage of Siva Sakti seems to constitute an important concept that Sakti and Siva remain ever united in the Siva temple. But when the Devi is worshipped as a Primordial deity, how this concept is given effect to is not known for the marriage rite is prohibited in such instances.

It is to be mentioned here that among the existing structures in Tamil country, separate shrines for Gauri comes into existence only from the end of the 11th century A.D. However two temples, purely dedicated to Gauri were in existence even before the 10th century A.D. and they are the Kanyakumari temple at Kanyakumari and the Kamākshi temple at Kanchi. The Chola inscriptions testify to the existence of these temples prior to that period. Both these temples have Gauri as the main deity Pradhana Devata; though at Kanchi, she is considered the consort of Ekambaresvara. In such cases these āgamic references would be valid and may be taken to refer to an earlier tradition. But in Siva temples separate shrines for Devi have not come into existence. In such cases it is not clear whether these Āgamic codes have been abandoned or these parts of the Āgamas are posterior to the 11th century.

Sakti Pratimas

The Āgamas deal with Saktis under pratimas and their installation. These may be broadly divided into two aspects. 1) Saktis portrayed as consorts of Siva and 2) Sakti in her independent manifestations as Durga, Kālī, Saptamātās etc.

Of many forms of Siva the number varying from text to text, some are accompanied by Devi and others not. In most cases where she accompanies Siva, she is shown with two arms standing, holding Kataka mudra in her right arm or Utpala flower while her left is shown hanging. Where Siva is shown seated as Somaskanda image, she is also seated, sometimes resting her left arm on the pedestal. In the case of Ālingana Candrasekhara form, also called Pradoshamurti, Siva is shown embracing Gauri. In case of Gauriprasāda, Siva is shown trying to appease her anger. In the case of Gayasambhāra murti, She is to be portrayed shivering and exhibiting her fear and at the same time carrying the child in her arm. The Rauravāgama states that Devi should be portrayed standing by the side of Nrittamurti Siva, holding the child in her hand.

It is of interest to note that in all the āgamas, Tripurāntaka images are said to be accompanied by the Devi. From literature and philosophy of the period, we find Devi as Tripura Bhairavi occupying a pre-eminant position. But in none of the Āgamas so far published do we come across the term Tripura Bhairavi applied to the Devi accompanying Tripurāntaka.

In some representations of Siva like Dakṣiṇāmūrti, Bhikṣāṭana etc., Devi is not to be portrayed.

Saktidvata

Of the independent manifestations of Devi, the Ajitāgama speaks of two forms of Sakti. She should be portrayed a young beautiful damsel with prominent breasts and parts. She should be portrayed with four arms, carrying sūla, pāsa, patāka and kaṭaka mudras. She should be either standing or seated on a lotus pedestal. The second form of Sakti would be a two armed Devi standing or seated, wearing Karaṇḍamakuta; she will carry Kaṭaka mudra in the right arm and the left arm would be placed on the thigh or on the seat. The left leg would be slightly bent and the right extended.

*Saktirupadvayam*¹

बद्धचण्डातकं चैव प्रोद्भिन्न नवयौवनम्
पीनोन्नतकुचं चाव विसाज्यचन स्वलम् ।
शूलं पाशं पताकं कटकामुलमेव च
दक्षिण इतरयोः चैव हस्तयोः परिकल्पयेत् ।
आसीनं सुस्थितं चापि पङ्कजासन मध्यमे
अथवा अन्यप्रकारेण तदीयं रूपं उच्यते ।
एक वक्त्रं प्रसन्नास्त्रं करणमकुटान्वितं
द्विनेत्रं द्विभुजं चैव श्यामपीत निभं तथा ।
तदीयं दक्षिण हस्तं कटकामुलं उच्यते
वामपाणितलं चापि कारयेत् विष्टराभितं ।
कुञ्चितं वामपादं दक्षिणं स्यात् विलम्बितं
अथ वामोद बिम्बस्तं अस्य वामकरं स्थितं ।
पूर्ववत् दक्षिणं हस्तं सबभिरथ भूषितं
एवं शक्ति द्विरूपं स्यात् ।

Ajita-Kriya-36 295-300

The Suprebheda refers to four armed Devi, holding utpala flower and akshamāla in the upper arms and varada and abhaya in the lower arms.² (Ajita II pp. 50 footnote).

Gauri Pratishṭā

The Isana Sivagurudeva Paddhati,³ has a full chapter on Gauri Pratishṭā. It gives the Gauri Gāyatri as “Aum Kāmāyai ca Vidmahe Mālīnyai ca dhīmahi Tanno Gauri Pracodayāt”.

1. Ajitagama—Kriya—36 : 295—300.

2. Ibid. II. Page 50. Foot Note.

3. Isana sivaguru dava Paddhati—Ed. by Ganapa L. Sastri, Trivandram.

This is at variance with the other Gāyatri, mentioned earlier. According to this text, Gauri is four armed holding Pāsa, Ankusa, Abhaya and Varada.

The following are the toranas that would adorn the four directions of the mandapa.

- | | |
|------------------|------------------------|
| 1. Bhadrā | 3. Vijrmbha and |
| 2. Vijayā | 4. Lohitā . |

The eight entrance vessels, dvāra kumbhas are :

- | | |
|---------------------|----------------------|
| 1. Jayā | 5. Nityā |
| 2. Vijayā | 6. Vilāsini |
| 3. Ajitā | 7. Saundī and |
| 4. Aparājitā | 8. Aghorā . |

The following deities are shown in the flags, two on each side

- | | |
|----------------------|---------------------|
| 1. Kundā | 5. Kalushā |
| 2. Kumudā | 6. Ghoshani |
| 3. Vidyunmālā | 7. Karālī |
| 4. Vibhūṣaṇā | 8. Vikrīṭā . |

In the central vessel, Gauri is invoked as seated on bull Vrshārūḍhā. Gauri is called Mononmani. As Vrshārūḍhā, she is four armed, holding sūla, tanka, abhaya and varada.

As mentioned earlier, when the image is brought for installation it is placed on five spreads. These five spreads represent the five elements.

Mandape atha tato vedyam
Sayane pancadhāstrī
Panca Bhūtātmake dēvīm
Sāyayitvā abhi pāyayet

The installatory rites are the same. In invoking various powers in the image, Sarasvati is to be invoked in the heart, Savitri and Gāyatri in the breasts. The Devi is said to have eight secondary deities. They are :

- | | |
|------------------------|----------------------------|
| 1. Anangarūpā | 5. Bhuvanapālikā |
| 2. Anangamadanā | 6. Sarvasisirā |
| 3. Madanāturā | 7. Anangavedanā and |
| 4. Pavanavegā | 8. Ananga mekhalā . |

The Vrshabha bull, is said to be the vehicle of Gauri. Seven mothers with Vira and Ganesa, Skanda, Sāsta and Candra are parishadevatas of Gauri. This text gives ten mudrās which are called Gauri mudrās.

- | | |
|---------------------|------------------------|
| 1. Āvāhini | 6. Drāvini |
| 2. Sihāpini | 7. Karshani |
| 3. Nishturā | 8. Sannidhāpini |
| 4. Kshobhini | 9. Vandini |
| 5. Mohini | 10. Mahāmudra . |

In the gopura entrance Trisūlini and Khadgini are the deities. In the second circle, eight Gananāyikās are invoked. They are :

- | | |
|--------------------|-------------------------|
| 1. Karālī | 5. Saci |
| 2. Vikarālī | 6. Mohini |
| 3. Ugrā | 7. Māyā and |
| 4. Vānī | 8. Mahālakshmi . |

The Gaurisena army of Gauri are eight in number. They are :

- | | |
|-------------------|-------------------|
| 1. Riddhi | 5. Medha |
| 2. Smṛti | 6. Kānti |
| 3. Dhṛiti | 7. Mati |
| 4. Sraddhā | 8. Sruti . |

The Bull is the vehicle and the flag of Gauri. In each of the eight directions, 12 Senānāyikas (called Pārshad nāyikās) are worshipped. Since the list is incomplete we are not listing them here.

Durga

Durga is one of the most important aspect of Sakti, worshipped independently as well as one of the Parivāradevatas, in Siva temples.

Apart from the legends in the various Purānas, some of the Āgamas too, give the story connected with the origin of Durga. In Ajita āgama, Siva himself narrates the origin of the Goddess. "Once I called my consort by the name of Kālī. She was offended by my address as Kālī. All my efforts to pacify her went in vain. I tried to give her a beautiful colour but she refused to accept that, but wanted to attain it by her own penance and started doing penance. Brahma, at my bidding, gave her the desired request. Brahma addressed her, 'You, mother of the Universe, be pleased to take your form, leaving this colour as a kosa by your own power for the benefit of the worlds'. Devi did likewise and to the form that emanated, she gave her powers and weapons. She is called Durgā, Kausikī, Caṇḍī and Bhavānī".¹ The above account corresponds to the story in Vāmanapurāna (54-6-79).

'Bam' is said to be the mulamantra main chant to be pronounced with bindu and nāda. Two Durgā Gayatris are mentioned.

"*Aum Kātyāyanyāya Vidmahe
Kanyakumārī dhīmahi
Tanno Durgī Pracodayāt*"

The above Gayatri is mentioned in the Yogajāgama; the *Kāranagama*² gives another version of Durgā Gāyatri, which reads as

"Aum Simhadhvajāyai ca Vidhmahē Cakra hastāyai Dhīmahi Tanno Durgā Pracodayāt"

Ajitāgama gives a third version of Durgā Gāyatri as

"*Aum Kanyārūpāyai ca Vidhmahe Sūla hastāyai ca
dhīmahi, Tanno Durgā pracodayāt*"

1. Rauravagama—Kriyapata—35 : 2-10.
2. Karanagama—I 98 : 38.

Durga is installed as an independent main deity, Pradhāna Devata in separate temples or as a secondary deity Parivāradevatā in other temples. As an independent deity Durga can be installed in villages, wherever linga can be installed, says the Rauravāgama.

The temple dedicated to Durgā will bestow pleasures (Bhukti) or victory if it faces east and mukti if it faces west. The temple should have the sanctum garbhagraha preceded by a mandapa. The sacrificial altars in front should be in the form of Yoni and padma.

In the Svayampradhāna temples, Ulkhāmukhī (boar head) and Vijihva are placed as Dvāradevatas (deities of the entrance). The lion is to be placed as her mount in front. She would be accompanied by eight Parivāras, who are as Jyeshṭhā, Bhūmī, Moti, Mohini, Prakṛiti, Vikṛiti, Niyati and Nivṛiti. There should be a mahāpiṭha adorned with Pūtanās outside¹.

Daily worship and festival are to be done thrice a day. The annual festivals are to be done for single, three, five or seven days, either in the month of Kṛittika or Madhu (Āshāda).

As a Parivāradevata, Durga is an invariable deity in Siva and Vishnu temples though her position varies in different texts. The Dīpta, Yogaja and Vīrāgamas, assign her to the south-east, while Karana assigns the south. Rauravāgama prescribes north as her quarters.

Installation of Durga Image

In the installation of Durga, the following parts are prescribed in Ajītāgama. First is mentioned the rite of eye opening. The carving of the eyes (called opening of the eyes) is a special rite. The sculpture is placed in a pavilion; rice is spread and the sculpture is placed over that standing, facing east. The sculptor will carve the eyes. First he will draw the lines with a golden needle. Three eyes are thus marked. In the right eye honey is applied, and in the left milk, while for the third eye also honey is applied. Sūrya, Candra and Agni mantras are uttered for the respective eyes. (right eye—Sūrya; left eye—Candra; and the third eye—Agni). Then the eyes should be carved and shown to Brahmins accompanied by the Durga Gayatri. Then it should be cleaned with panca gavya and Panca mṛt (five earth). Then it should be anointed with fragrant water.

The next rite is the placing of the sculpture in water for some days. This rite is called Jalādhivāsa. After taking the image in procession around the village, it is placed either in the river water or in a water tub for one, three, five or seven nights. The water vessels representing Vidyesas are placed near the water source.

The third rite is 'allowing the image to lie on a spread of paddy and five blankets'. This is done in a mandapa where five blankets are spread over a spread of paddy. Over this the sculpture is layed. Eight Kalāsas are placed around the sculpture, beginning from the east, representing Vāma and the other Saktis. The Vardhani vessel, representing Manonmani, is placed by the side of the sculpture in the 1. Ajita—Kriya Chapter 32.

North-eastern direction. The Kāranāgama and Svāyambhuva āgama, state that the image should be beautified with garments and ornaments.¹

With reference to the placing of vessels, the Kāranāgama prescribes the following. To the right of the image the main vessel (vardhani) should be placed. Nine vessels representing Durgā, Kātyāyāni, Vijayā, Aparājita, Devī, Vēgavati, Gāyatri, Sarvarī and Gāndhari are placed around. According to the Suprabhadagama the dikpalas directional deities are to be invoked instead of Saktis.²

The next rite is the oblation in fire (homa) with twigs, ghee, food, cornflake, and honey with Durga bija mantra. The Kāranāgama calls the fire as Devī agni and states that the Pūrnāhuti should be done with Dēvī Gāyatri.³ The next rite is the Kumbhābhishēka, (installation) which is done as per rites for other deities, except with this difference that the mantras are appropriate to the Devī.⁴

Vaishnava Texts on Durga

Durga is a parivaradevata in not only Siva temples but also in Vaishnavite temples. She is described as a deity in the third āvarana (circle) according to the Marichi Samhita.⁵ To the north of the eastern entrance, is to be worshipped Durga, black in colour, clad in white silken garment, eight or four armed holding Sankha, Cakra and other weapons. She is to be beautified with all ornaments and a breast band. She was born in Krithikā nakshatra. Her sound is like a resonant bell. Her mount and standard are lion. She is to be worshipped as Durgā, Kātyāyāni, Vaishnavī and Vindhyāvasini.

ग्राम्भारात् उत्तरे श्यामवर्णा सिताम्बरवरा
षष्ठ्युजा चतुर्भुजा वा संस्रवक्रवरा
सर्वाभरण संयुक्ता कक्ष्यावद्ध वनस्तनी कृतिकोपम्वरा
षष्ठाक्षा नामाक्षर बीजा सिंह पञ्च बाह्वरा
दुर्गा ! दुर्गा कार्त्तयावनी बंजनी विन्ध्यवासिनी इति ।

p. 123

The *Bhṛigu Samhita*⁶ has a separate chapter on Durgā —Durga Kalpa. The Bhṛigu Samhita belongs to the Vaikhānasa school of the Vaishnavite branch. Its date is not certain but should be considered an early text which could be assigned to the mediaeval period. The Durgā kalpa of this text is more elaborate than any of the sections available even in the Saiva tantras. In 235 verses, Durgāmahima, Bimbamāna, Parivāra, Bālālaya, Pratishṭākrama, Nityakrama, Utsava etc. are given in detail.

Icca Sakti of Narayana

Durgā is called the very Vaishnavī māyā and Yoganidra. She is the subtle Sakti and Prakriti. She is also the embodiment of Vedas, Trayimayī. She took the form of Durga for the protection of the world. When Nārāyana protects this universe, his Iccā

1. Karanagama—I 98 : 20-22.; Svayambhuva—52 : 12-14.
2. Subrabhadagama.—I 46: 6-7.
3. Karanagama.—I 98: 31-36.
4. Ajitagama—II Chapter 53.
5. Marichi Samhita—Madras. 1926. Page 123.
6. Bhṛigusamhita—Tripati.

Sakti takes this Durga form. Durgā by her own will is born in the universe for its protection.

It is interesting to note that in this text Durga is considered the Iccā Sakti of Bhagvān Nārāyaṇa

“Yathā Nārāyaṇaḥ Sarvān Sadeva asura mānavāni Lokān nityam pālayate Bhagavān nirvahan sthithim Tathā tatsaktih Isāna Tadicchā Klpta Vighraha”

Durga is to be worshipped for obtaining the desired effects not only here but also in the other world. Brahmins can worship her for attaining Brahminhood Brahma-vriddhi. Kshatriyas can worship her for conquering their enemies. Since she is the Vaishnavi Sakti, she would bestow the fruits undoubtedly. She can be installed in Villages, Towns, Pattanas, by the side of mountains, on the banks rivers, or lakes. She can be worshipped by the kings in their palaces.

Before erecting a temple, this text prescribes the erection of a separate bālālaya for her. The image for this bālālaya may be made of either copper or wood. She is to be four armed, holding Sankha and Cakra in the rear arms and holding her front arms in anjali. For the bālālaya the attendant deities are also to be provided and worshipped.

The main image of Durgā can be made either with four arms or eight arms. The four armed image is called the Saumyamurti (the benign form); Sankha and Cakra will be in the rear arms while the front arms will be in anjali hasta. It is not known why the text prescribes anjali hasta for the image. We do have Kālī images with anjali hasta when she is portrayed with Siva doing the tāṇḍava dance, but for Durga this seems to be a peculiar pose. So far we have not noticed any Durga image in Vishnu or Siva temple, with anjali hasta.

Durga is to be portrayed with eight arms if she is to be propitiated for victory over enemies, in which form she would carry sakti, bow, sword, discus, arrow, shaft, pestle and shield. She would be portrayed with a terrific countenance, standing with her right leg placed on the head of buffalo and the left slightly bent. We have an image of Durgā, in Mahabalipuram in a Vishnu Temple (the Ādivarāha temple) where she stands with eight arms, but with the left on the head of Mahisha and the right slightly bent.

The Bhṛigu Samhita states that Durga can be installed in the village in the northern direction with attendant deities. On either side of the Devi are to be shown two women attendants, called Vinda and Pushti bearing chouris. Yakshas and Gandharvas are to be shown as Paricārakas. In the wall to the right of the image, should be portrayed Padma with a lotus in her hand and Umā holding a garland of flowers in her left (probably in the left wall). Sages Āngiras and Mrgaṇḍu should be shown adoring the Goddess with flowers in their arms. In the inner entrance antardvāra are to be shown Nandagopa and Yasoda. (Since Vishnumāyā was once the daughter of them). Gangā and Yamunā are the first dvārapālikas while Aditi and Diti would be the second dvārapālikas.

The rites of installation, as detailed in the text is almost the same prescribed in Saiva Āgamas discussed early except for this difference that the Vishnusūkta hymn plays a prominent role here. Further, Durgā sūkta beginning with “Jātavēdase sunavāma.....” is given prominence here instead of Durgā Gāyatri.

Vaishnava Rites of Durga

As mentioned earlier, this text is interesting as it gives the daily rites connected with Durgā pūja. The priest should enter the temple uttering the mantra Jātavēdase sunavāma; circumambulate the temple; offer salutations to dvārapālikas and then open the door and do namaskar to the Devi. The bell should be rung and the nirmālyas cleared. Nirmālyadhārini should be propitiated, (Isāna Sivaguru deva paddhati gives the name of Nirmālyadhārini as Simhika) with the address :

“Jayam ca sukhadam ānanda bhogadāyini”

Then the area should be cleaned and the punca suddhis (five purificatory rites like bhūta suddhi, Ātma suddhi, dravya suddhi, bimba suddhi and mantra suddhi) performed. Then the goddess is invoked with the verse

“Āyātu Bhagavati Devi, dhvajini hamsa (simha) Vāhini Senāvarūdhini Durgē”

Then the following worships are offered with appropriate mantras, āvāhana, anumati, pādya, ācamanīyam pushpa, gandha, dhūpa, dīpa, arghya, ācamanīya, snapana, Vimrja (drying) Vastra, uttariya, ābharana, pādya, ācamana, pushpa, gandha, anjana, ādarsa, followed by dhūpa, dīpa, havis and then balī is to be offered. This process of daily worship is identical to all the deities, except that the mantras vary according to the deity for example the text gives the following hymn for Durga.

“Durgām Kātyāyanīm cētē Vaishnavīm Vindhyavāsiniṁ”

The attendant deities like Ramā, Umā, Nandagopa, Yasoda, Gangā, Yamunā, Jayā, Vijayā and the lion are to be worshipped. The text also gives a third set of dvārapālas, whose names are given as Ugrasena and Jayanta. Ugrasena will hold trident and Jayanta will hold club. They are called Yakshamukyas. Another important person to be worshipped is Kumbodara, the pot bellied and short, bhūta who is described as a Durgabhakta (great devotee of Durgā).

The text says the Yajamāna should perform Sāntika and Paushṭika worships only and should not permit ābhicārika worship. But in case the ruler wants the ābhicārika worship for gaining victory, it should be done along with Sāntika and Paushṭika worship, only.

Festivals to Durgā are to be performed at the end of first installation ceremony, on the natal star of the ruler, in times auspicious occasions and when faced with great calamities. Festivals are also performed on Durgā pancamis. The festivals are to be performed for one, two, three, five, seven and nine days. The festivals are begun with flag hoisting ceremony. The flag will have the figure of a lion topped by a parasol and flanked by chouris. The flag is duly worshipped. The priest will go round the village and offer bali to the directional deities and with due festivities and hoist the flag.

The festival mahotsava of Durgā is performed, as for other deities. It is of interest to not such a detailed description of Durgā pūja described in a Vaishnava text of the South. It must be admitted that after 11th century, Vaishnavism took a purely sectarian garb and slowly jettisoned the rites connected with the Saivite faith. While the followers of the Vaikhānasa school continued to have a tolerant outlook, the Pāncarātra sect followed a militant path. In many of the temples, following Vaikhānasa tradition, one could see even today worship offered to Durgā; It has gone out of vogue in temples controlled by Pāncarātra cult. However we must admit even Pāncarātra Āgamas do deal with worship of Durgā for example Visvakṣenasamhita gives the worship of Durgā with four or eight arms.¹ Dr. Smith has also drawn our attention to an image of Arya seated, four armed, holding Sankha, Chakra, bow and abhaya and by a deer.

Paddhatis on Durga

We will discuss elsewhere, the role of a group of literature called Paddhatis, in temple rituals. Here we deal with the worship of Durgā as given in one of the Paddhatis. A long chapter is devoted to the installation and worship of Durga in Īśānasīva Gurudeva paddhati a work by Īśāna Siva (chapter 55). We will only note the salient feature, given in this excellent work.

The Durgā mantra is said to consist of nine syllables. The Durgā Gāyatri according to this text.

“Kātyāyanyaya Vidhmahe, Kanyakumāri dhīmahi, Tanno durgi pracodayār”.

The following five vedic mantras constitute what is called Durgāpancami.

1. Jātavēdase.....
2. Tām agnivarṇām.....
3. Agne tvām.....
4. Visvam.....

These are called mantra adhvas, the mantric path.

Devi is portrayed with four, eight or sixteen arms. She may either be seated on a siṃhāsana or stand on the head of mahishā or she may be shown on a lion. If shown with four arms, she should hold conch, discus, varada and abhaya. If with eight arms, she would hold in the left tarjanī, bow, shield and conch and in the right trident, arrow, sword, and discus. If shown with sixteen arms, she would hold in the left arms kapāla, ankusa, gada, satagni, parasu, bow, shield and conch. The eight arms will bear sūla, pāsa, fire, vajra, tomara, arrow, sword and discus. The image must be made to the madhyama dasatāla measurement.

1. Vaishnava Iconography. by H. Danial Smith. Madras-1960. Page 267.

For installation, a separate pavilion should be erected. Four toranas should be erected on all the four sides. In the toranas are to be consecrated four Vedas and Yanjēṣa, Prabhakara, Mangala and Subhadra. Inside the four toranas, two flags on each side should be placed. The presiding deities of these flags are Kunda, Kumuda, Vidyunmāla, Bhishana, Kalushi, Ghoshani, Karali and Vikriti. They will have conch and other emblems drawn on them. In the eight vessels Kālī, Karālī, Viraja, Mandara, Vindhyavāsini, Suprabha, Simhavakra, and Daityadamani, each holding a sword and shield, are to be worshipped. In the central vessel (vardhani) is to be worshipped Sivā as Simhavāhini.

The installation rites are similar to other deities. The Kriya Sakti is to be invoked in the plītha and Jñānasakti in the image. The Ācārya should meditate the chinmayī sakti, in his Kundalini and raise the same through his Brahmanāḍī (a nerve in the body) and raise to the padma centre in him, and meditate this as a light of Sakti which he should transfer to the heart of the image. Then the image should be anointed with the auspicious waters of the vessels.

Jayā and Vijayā are the Dvarapālikas and Gangā and Yamunā are the dvarasrī. The following are considered the eight dvarapālikas. Jaya and Vijaya in the east; Raudri and Bhīṣani in the South; Sulini and Prabha in the West; and Aparājita and Jayanti in the north. These are considered Virgins carrying sword and shield. Lokapalas, Simha (also called Mahāsimha) the seven mothers with Vira and Ganesa, Sasta, Skanda and moon are the Durgaparishadas (attendant deities). Simhika is the nirmālya dhārini (the receiver of nirmālya). At the entrance of the Gopura, on the innerside are Hradini and Madini and on the outside Katyayani and Canda.

In the second circle eight Goddesses are propitiated. They are Kālī, Karālī, Viraja, Mandara, Vindhyavasini, Suprabha, Simhavakra and Daityamardini. The Durgasena consists of eight who are listed as

- | | |
|------------------------|-------------------------|
| 1. Brahmaghoshā | 5. Āryā |
| 2. Sughoshā | 6. Hemavarnā |
| 3. Kumārī | 7. Krittika and |
| 4. Varavarnini | 8. Abhayaprada . |

In each of the eight directions, eight Kanyakas (total 64) are to be propitiated as Gananāyikas.

EAST :

1. Saumyā
2. Bhadrā
3. Jayā
4. Nandā
5. Kundā
6. Kumudā
7. Dyuti
8. Vidyunmāla

S. EAST :

1. Mahābalā
2. Balā
3. Subalā
4. Balā
5. Abalā
6. Bhīṣanā
7. Ratī
8. Kalushā.

SOUTH

1. Ghoshani
2. Nandani
3. Smṛthi
4. Yuddhapriya
5. Devasiddhaptauji
6. Vikṛti
7. Kṛiti
8. Mahasuravimardini

WEST

1. Hṛāḍini
2. Kshemakārika
3. Āryā
4. Bhadrā
5. Bhadrakālī
6. Varuṇi
7. Amṛtā
8. Ambika

NORTH

1. Riddhi
2. Lakshmi
3. Tuṣṭi
4. Pushṭi
5. Kīrti
6. Dhanesvari
7. Arbhuda
8. Madā

S. WEST

1. Vikarati
2. Palini
3. Sūlakātyāyani
4. Mahayogesvari
5. Gauri
6. Kanda
7. Canda
8. Khadgini.

N. WEST

1. Kshemyā
2. Vedagarbhā
3. Anantā
4. Sarvanishkala
5. Sānti
6. Bhairavi
7. Prāṇā
8. Cetanā.

N. EAST

1. Sṛuṭi
2. Smṛti
3. Nṛi
4. Bhimā
5. Brahmacārini
6. Nilāmbara
7. Sūlini
8. Saraswati.

These sixty four attendants are called Gananāyikas. It is not known whether these are modelled out of 64 yoginis.

Sapta Matas

Isāna Sivagurudeva Paddhati deals in a separate chapter,¹ the installation of Saptamātas. As this is perhaps the only elaborate treatise we shall discuss this at some length. The text deals with only the seven mothers and has no reference to ashtamātas. The Saptamātas listed are

Brāhmi
Māhesvari
Kaumārī
Vaishnavī

1. Isanasivaguru Paddati. Chapter 30.

Vārāhi
Indrāni
Cāmūṇḍi

At the beginning is Virabhadra and at the end Ganesvara. Isāna Siva states that he follows Svaccanda Bhairava tantra and Mātritantra in writing this chapter. Evidently the worship of Saptamātas were brought by the followers of Bhairava and Śakta cult.

The following mantras are given for each Goddess.

Brāhmi
Rgyajus Sāma atharva
Kamaṇḍalu Kūrcadhārini namo namah

Maheśvari
Devi, Parasudhārini, Svetarūptini
Maheśvari namo namah

Kaumari
Sakti dhārini, Mayuravāhini Kukkuṣa dhvajini kumkuma Varnini kaumāri namo namah

Vaishnavi
Sankha Cakra Dhārini Garuḍa
Vāhini Vaishnavi namo namah

Vārāhi
Hala musala dhārini, damshtriṇi
Sukarmanī Simhavāhini
Vārāhi namo namah

Indrani
Vajradhārini, Gajavāhini, syāma
Varnini namo namah

Cāmunda
Kapāladhārini, Nilāmbavarnini,
Pretavāhini, Humkāriṇi, namo namah

Virabhadra
Virabhadraṇya, Lakulīśvaraṇya
Purushāya Rakshasutrāgnidhārīne
Dhruvayapataye yogarūpāya
Vyāpine namo namah

Vighnesvara

Vighnesvarāya ghanādhipataye Hastivaktrāya namo namah

These mūlamantras basic hymns are used when the seven mothers are grouped together; when there is only Cāmuṇḍa the following is the mantra.

*Aum namo Bhagavati Trinētre
Kālī Kālavarṇini Aṣṭabhuja
Sūlakapāla dhārini Preta vāhini
Rudhirasneha sampūrṇa vaktre
Cāmuṇḍī namo namah*

Swam, Bull, Peacock, Garuda, Lion, Elephant and deadbody are mentioned as the vehicles of the respective mothers and they are used in their respective flags also. Dharbha grass, trident, Sakti, discus, plough, vajra and kapāla are described as their respective emblems. The Gāyatri for the respective hymns are formed with the names of vehicles and flags, for example for Brāhmi

*Hamsa Vāhinyai ca Vidhmahe
Kūrca hastāyai ca Dhīmahī Tanno Brāhmi pracodayāt.*

For Virabhadra the following is the Gāyatri

*Lakulisvarāya Vidhmahe
Akṣhamālādharāya dhīmahī
Tanno Virabhadrah pracodayāt*

For Ganapati

*Ekadantāya Vidhmahe
Hastī vaktrāya dhīmahī
Tanno Ganapathī pracodayāt*

It may be seen all these Gayatri's are specially composed with none of them going back to remote antiquity as Durgā Gāyatri etc.

The images of mothers should correspond to the male counterparts. If installed with the group Cāmunda will have four arms, holding Sūla, Sword and Kapāla and Pāsa. In place of sūla or sword she may hold damaruka as well. If she is represented alone She is to be shown with eight arms holding kapāla, shield, bell and snake in the left while in the right would hold, Sūla, sword, vetāla and damaruka. She should be shown fierce and seated on preta āsana. Her locks of hairs flowing like glowing fire. The right leg placed firmly on the seat and with the left she is shown trampling on Dārukāsura. She must be accompanied by Bhūta, Preta, Pisāca, Hākini, Dākini, and Yoginis and also fighters. She is Cāmuṇḍa.

The temple must be rectangular in shape and may face either east or north. For snitallation of Saptamātas, a special mandapa must be erected and on all the four sides toranas should be provided. These toranas are Pramodani, Abhaya, Sānti and Subhada.

Each torana entrance is presided over by Kumbhi, Nikumbhi, Vajrābhishāna and Mangini. The entrances have two vessels each and their names are

- | | |
|------------------------|------------------------|
| 1. Dūtikā | 5. Pāsini |
| 2. Pālinā | 6. Varunī |
| 3. Danḍinī | 7. Sankhinī and |
| 4. Bhavahastaka | 8. Padminī . |

The flags of the respective Saptamātas and Vīra and Ganesa are provided. If Cāmuṇḍa is represented alone, the flag will have the figure of a Paisaca drawn out.

Two vessels are to be placed in the middle; one is the main vessel in which Cāmuṇḍo, seated on Paisāca is to be worshipped. The other vessel is Vardhani, the weapon seated on lion and in the form of a woman is worshipped. It should have Trisūla, as its head and holding Kapāla and sword. Around it are to be made the nine vessels. The central vessel would be Cāmunda and the rest would represent Brāhmi and other beginning from the east. Fire offering to be made in each altar, uttering the respective mantras.

The eye opening of the image should be performed after taking in procession around the village for Pratishthā installation the image is brought to the mandapa. A central spread surrounded by eight spreads are to be prepared and the images placed on them with Cāmuṇḍa in the centre. If Cāmuṇḍa is to be installed alone, she should be placed in the centre on five spreads. To the north of each image a vessel is to be placed. Inside each, the respective Vahana and weapons made or drawn in gold are to be placed. Virabhadra's vessel should be in the west and Ganesa's in the North east. The vessel should be covered with a lid after placing Kūrcas (darbha grass) in them. In each Kumbha the respective Gāyatri is to be invoked and worshipped. Outside the Vedi (Pedestal) are to be placed the eight attendant ghatas representing Aindri, Āgneyi, Yami, Nairrtī, Vārūni, Vāyavi, Kauberī and Isānī. They are to be meditated with four arms, holding sūla and pāsa in their upper arms and holding the lower arms in anjalihasta. They are to be accompanied by their respective consorts. Another ghata is to be placed for the installation of the balipītha. In this is worshipped ugrasena with a terrific countenance black in colour holding a sword in her right arm and placing her left on her thigh.

For performing fire offerings the following mantras are prescribed.

Brāhmi	Brahmaja Jñānam . . .
Māhesvari	Trayambakam Yajāmohe . . .
Kaumārī	Ayam Kumarat . . .
Vaishnavi	Yotteyam . . .
Varāhi	Idam Vishnu . . .
Indrānī	Svasti na Indro . . .
Cāmuṇḍa	Isatas . . .
Gānapati	Gananām tva . . .

The mantra portion for Virabhadra is lost.

Eight vessels are to be placed around Cāmunda and in each the following are to be worshipped. Bhavāni, Sarvāni, Urgā, Pasupati, Sankari, Sasini, Bhīmā and Rudrāni. In the central altar Cāmunda is to be invoked and oblation performed. Like wise in the respective directions, Tatpuruṣa, Aghora, Vāmadeva and Sadyōjāta are to be worshipped. In the fire, a cake made of māsha grain is to be offered. This is a substitute for goat's flesh. (Evidently flesh was offered originally in such sacrifices). The final āhuti is to be performed in agni and bali is to be offered for the bhūtas. The bali consists of cooked rice mixed with sesame jaggery, ghee, and red colour. This is again a substitute for flesh mamsa. Kshetrapāla, Pisācas, Pretas, Rākshasas, Nāgas, Asuras, Yaksha and Gandharvas are offered bali, starting from eastern directions. In the upper region Bhūtas and in the lower region are water deities receiving offerings.

Having performed this offering, seven virgins and one Brāhmaṇa are to be fed with delicious food. Then Brahmins, lingins and women and other mātribhaktas (devotees of the mothers) are to be fed. That night should be spent in dance, music etc.

The next day, after doing preliminary worship to the images the āchārya would place the respective pedestals over the turtle stone Kurmasila, inside the sanctum. If Cāmunda is to be installed alone, her pedestal alone is to be placed. In them, five precious gems, plaques bearing the figures of the respective mounts and weapons made of gold are to be placed. While placing them, the respective bijas of the mothers are to be invoked. To the accompaniment of Vedic chanting, music, dance etc., the images are to be circumambulated and taken inside the sanctum and the images are set in position with their respective mantras. Brahmi to Cāmunda are to be placed in one line beginning from east. In the east should be Virabhadra and the west Ganapati.

From the respective Kumbhas, the respective bijas are to be transferred to the heart of the respective images. Then the Ācārya performs the psychic transference of Parā-sakti from Mūlādhāra to the image. The process as described is as follows.

The guru should invoke the subtle Parāsakti, who is chinmātra, manifesting in his Kundalini lotus. She is the creator of Vidyutlekha. The Ācārya should raise her through his nerve centres, to Sahasrapadmā, where she would manifest herself as Bindu, Nāda, Kalā, Amṛta and rasa and transfer her to the heart of the image. In describing Parāsakti thus being transferred, Isāna Siva reaches poetic height

ततो गुरुः स्वमूलाज कुण्डलिन्याः समुदगतां
 परां शक्तिं सूक्ष्मरूपां विद्युत्लेखानुकारिणीं
 नाडीमार्गेण नीत्वा उन्मूर्धं हृदिबन्धुं द्वादशाङ्गकां
 तद्वयोम पद्ममध्येन्दुं कलामृत रसास्पृतां
 चिन्मात्रायाः तु तत् शक्त्या
 नीत्वा ऐक्यं बीजं उच्चारन्
 हंस संपुट मध्यस्थां
 नादान्तस्वर भूवितां

आनीय नाडीमार्गेण देव्याः इत् पङ्कजे न्यसेत्—I.S.P. Kriya. 59, 85. 89.

After performing pūjas, the attendant deities are to be installed in their respective directions and from the kumbhas like Aindri etc. consecration is to be performed. Similarly in the balipitha, ugrasena is to be consecrated.

For the Saptamāta temple, eight dvārapālas are listed. They are :

East :	Rakshōhana Vāhaghahana
South :	Sumukha Kāladanda
West :	Atithi Mudita
North :	Sakala and Suktikarna .

Each entrance is named as

East :	Pramōdani
South :	Abhayā
West :	Sānti and
North :	Subhakari .

On each side two female deities are mentioned

East :	Karālī Kāmukā
South :	Subhagā Dāhini
West :	Gagana Hlādinī
North :	Vishpullingī Virūpākshī .

The names of Matrśenas who reside in the lotus petals are

Sundarī	Yoginī
Sākhinī	Amṛtapūrva
Vishakanthī	Ghataki and Vasundhara	Amṛtapūrva .

These female deities are also called Yoginis.

Nityotsava daily festival is prescribed for Saptamātas when Bali is offered to the various deities of Matas. With the bali bera taken out in procession to the accompaniment of music, etc. the offerings are made to, dvāradēvatas, Gopura devatas, Balipithas etc. standing at the Balipitha, the priest should utter 'Ye the attendants of the Matas, residing in earth, heaven, and nether worlds, Yoginis, Sākinī, Pretas, Kaṭapūṭās, Dākini's, Pisācās, Pramathas and all others be pleased to manifest here and partake this offering'

*Balipithasya puratah mantrena āmantrayet ganam
 Yah samastham Jagadvyāpya Mātriparishadās sthitās
 Yōginyas ape ca Sākinyas Prētās Katapūtanās
 Dākinyas ca Pisācās ca
 Vetālas Pramathās tathā
 Pātāle Bhuvī ca ākāse
 Yāsca yē va vasante tāh
 Te ca supritamanasā Pratigrh hantu imām balim.*

Going around the Yoginis are to be propitiated in the eastern direction; Sākini in the South east; Prētas in the south, Pūtanās in the South West, Dakinis in the west, Pisācas in the North West, vetālas in the North, and Bhūtas in the North east. Again coming back to the balipitha, ugrasena should be offered Bali.

Isānaguru discusses special festival to Saptamātas which he calls Mahāsānti the great sānti. This is performed to remove disease, drought, epidemics and other calamities. It can be performed in any month, either in the bright or dark half of the month. From dvītyai to ashtami, seven days are to be chosen for this worship. Beginning from Tuesday the seven days are also to be chosen and each day is named after each Mata beginning from Brahmi. The astra (Sūla) should be brought to the mandapa and worshipped. To the accompaniment of music and dance, pishtapasu must be offered. We are not told what is pishtapasu. Every morning and evening Parasava (a man of the Pārasava family) should sing and dance in front of the astra. In the middle of each night, maunabali should be offered.

On the sixth night, the great pasu, mahāpasu should be brought and worshipped. If the worship is arranged by Brahmin, the mahāpasu would be a stag; if by a king it would be an elephant; by a vaisya it would be a buffalo and for others Chagamrga (). The festival to begin with the sprouting rite (ankurārpanam) followed by the hoisting of flag. In the flag is to be drawn the figure of Paisāci if the temple is dedicated only to Cāmunda. But if it is dedicated to Saptamātas, the mounts of the seven respective mothers should be drawn around the Paisāchi. The Paisāchi should be drawn as a skeletal figure with rounded eyes, protruding teeth, hanging lips, gawing mouth, long neck and ūrdhvakesa. In her two arms she would hold kapāla and vetāla.

A special mandapa should be erected in front of the temple for bath and other offerings. To the accompaniment of Sūla, bali is to be offered at the appropriate quarters of the village, city or town. The bali consists of cooked rice mixed with red colour, and sandal. This is a substitute for flesh māmsa. In addition to the offerings at the directions, bali should be offered in front of all. If these specified animals are not available buffalo can be sacrificed by all.

In the afternoon of the seventh day upapasu (a goat) should be tied to the yūpasthambhas. Then the Mahāpasu should be cut and its blood should be offered to the mothers. The cooked rice mixed with its blood should be offered in all the directions.

The text is interesting in many ways. It prescribes stag, buffalo and even elephant as sacrificial animal. So far no record has come to light about the sacrifice of elephant. That even Brahmins consented to the sacrifice of stag, shows the impact of this mātā cult. Even to this day the sacrifice of buffalo by all sections of the society is prevalent in remote parts of the villages though it is prohibited under the existing law. The text is not however clear whether the upapasu, the goat was also to be sacrificed with the main animal. The animal sacrifice is specified for the evening of the seventh day in the text. But in present practise, most of the buffalo sacrifices are performed in midnights.

On the eight day, the worship should be conducted as per Saivāgama. This consist of Tīrthayātra i.e. taking the deity in procession to the water source and then the flag is lowered.

One interesting aspect of the Saptamātā cult as mentioned in this text, is that it is associated with the worship of Cāmunda. The text refers to Cāmunda, in this context and considers Her as the main deity pradhāna devatā. Even when the group of seven mothers are installed and worshipped the central deity of worship is Cāmunda. In the flag, in the Kumbha etc., we find the prominent position given to Cāmunda. It is in essence the worship of Cāmunda.

There is another point of interest that needs attention. Īśānaguru gives the worship of many deities like Saraswati, Gauri, Sāsta, Kshetrapāla etc. besides the main manifestations of Siva. For all these deities, when they are worshipped as pradhāna devatas, Saptamātas are mentioned invariably as Parivāra devatas.

VI

SILPA TEXTS

The great pioneer T.A. Gopinatha Rao has discussed in detail various representations of Devi, as given in the Āgama and Silpa texts in his "Elements of Hindu Iconography (Vol. I Pt. II. p. 327-400)". The veteran scholar J.N. Banerjee has similarly discussed the Devi cult. I have had occasion to peruse a good collection of manuscripts of Silpa texts with V. Ganapathi Sthapati, the Principal of the Sculpture Training Centre, Mamallapuram. He comes from a family of traditional Sthapathis and intends publishing these collections. Some of them have already been published while others are in manuscript stage. I am therefore not able to give reference to individual representations. All those listed here are from that collection.

It is difficult to discuss the date of these Silpa texts. Most of them have included later additions and were mainly used as manuals by the practising sthapatis. So we have dhyānaslokas of deities which are of recent origin. The silpa texts are sometimes found belonging to two different sects, as Vaishnava and Saiva. No separate text for the Śākta cult has survived. Most of the architectural treatises, like Mayamata, include chapters on iconography in which we get Devi representations. Some of these texts are of considerable antiquity. The Mayamata is referred to in Sangam works, but as it has come down to us it seems to preserve the 11th-12th century tradition.

In most of the silpa texts some forms of Devis are included. They generally give the complexion, colour of the garments, head dress, arms, the main emphasis being on the hands and the various emblems held in them. We have discussed a few significant representations of Devi here. It would be seen that we do not have dhyāna slokas for all the early representations as found in early Pallava and Chola period. We have included some modern illustrations in this study to compare them with the silpa text.

Durga

The Silpa texts speak of nine different manifestations of Durgās as Nava Durgā. The names of these nine Durgās vary according to texts. The main manuscript in the Mahabalipuram collections gives the following nine names :

- | | |
|-------------------------|-------------------------|
| 1. Agni Durgā. | 6. Rudra Durgā. |
| 2. Mahā Durgā. | 7. Vana Durgā. |
| 3. Jala Durgā. | 8. Sthūla Durgā. |
| 4. Brahma Durgā. | and |
| 5. Vishnu Durgā. | 9. Sūlini Durgā. |

The Sritatwanidhi gives the following nine names :

- | | |
|-------------------------------|------------------------------|
| 1. Sailaputri Durgā. | 6. Kāthyāyani Durgā. |
| 2. Brahmacārini Durgā. | 7. Kalarāthri Durgā. |
| 3. Candakānda Durgā. | 8. Mahā Gouri Durgā. |
| 4. Skanda Durgā. | and |
| 5. Kūshmanda Durgā. | 9. Siddidāyini Durgā. |

Another manuscript (No. 3) gives Brahma Durgā, Vishnu Durgā, Rudra Durgā, Vira Durgā, Mahishasura-mardini Durgā, Jaya Durgā, and Simha Durgā. The text is incomplete.

The following are the descriptions of the nine Durgas according to the main manuscript.

- Agni Durgā : Devi holds in her right arms chakra, sword, arrow and sūla. The left arms carry conch, shield, bow and kapāla. She stands on the head of a buffalo.
- Mahā Durgā : She resembles lightning in colour, and is seated on lion. Holds cakra, sword, shield, bow, arrow, pāsa and tarjani mudra in her arms; has three eyes.
- Jala Durgā : holds conch, sugarcane bow and arrow—three eyed; wears crescent moon on her kīrtīmakuta; seated on lion; adored by Devas and Siddhas.
- Brahma Durgā : Yellow in colour, with four heads and four arms; holds kendi, patāka, varada and akshamāla; three eyed Devi.
- Vishnu Durgā : holds sanka and chakra in the upper arms, abhaya and kaṣi in the lower arms; white in colour; stands on the head of Mahisha and is three eyed; Or holds sanka and cakra, bow, arrow, sūla and shield, kapāla and tarjani mudra in her arms; wears kīrti makuta and crescent moon on her head.
- Vana Durgā : Black in colour. Wears kundala in ears and crescent moon on her head; holds sanka, cakra, sword and anukusa in her arms; seated on a lion.

The preserved manuscript gives the description of dhyana slokas only for the seven Durgas and for the rest the manuscript is incomplete.

The manuscript number 3., in the Mahabalipuram collection gives the following description of the Nava Durgas.

- Brahma Durga : Yellow in colour, two eyed, four arms holding varada, abhaya, kamandahu and akshamāla; is on a padmapīṭha; wears jatāmakuta. The temple for this deity should be circular in form with bhadras in the centre. The goddess is seated on a swan.
- Viṣṇu Durga : Black in colour, two eyed, four armed, holding sankha, cakra and abhaya; varada in her arms; seated on a lion, carries a garuda standard; wears kirtita makuta and also stands on the head of a buffalo.
- Rudra Durga : spotless white in colour, wears jatā makuta and tigers skin, four arms, holds damaruka, nāga, abhaya and varada in her arms.

Sri Tatvanidhi gives the following description.

- Sailaputri Durga : Wears crescent moon seated on bull, holding sūla.
- Brahmacārini Durga : two armed, carries akshamala and kamandahu.
- Candakānda Durga : Seated on Garuda, wearing a terrific countenance.
- Skanda Durga : Seated on Simhāsana, two arms, holding lotus in both her arms.
- Kūshmānda Durga : Two arms, carrying pots in both her arms, one filled with liquor and the other filled with blood.
- Katyāyāni Durga : Seated on a simha with a sword.
- Kālārātri Durga : Wears a terrific countenance and is blue lotus in colour.
- Mahagouri Durga : Seated on white elephant, wearing white saree; she gives pleasures to Mahādeva.
- Siddhidāyini Durga : Devi adored by Siddhas, Gandarvas and Yakshas.

Another text of Sri Tatvanidhi gives the description of nine Durgas which are said to be in Skandayāmala text. One of the Durgas is said to have 18 arms. She is said to have sturdy hands, thighs and breasts and is adorned with characteristic ornaments. In the left arm she holds sūtra, shield, bell, mirror, tarjini, bow, standard, damaruka and pāsa. In the right arm she holds sakti, mudgala, sūla, vajra, conch, lotus, śalaka, arrow and cakra.

The other eight Durgas are said to bear 16 arms. They carry the same emblems except the arrow and the damaruka. The names of these nine Durgas are given as Rudra, Chanda, Sasi, Saiva, Caṇḍi, Krūra, Anucāndika, Navami and Ugracāṇḍa.

Sri Tatvanidhi gives the description of a Durga whose name is called Ripumārini. She is red in colour, holding tarjini and sūla in her arms. It also gives another Durga whose name is given as Vindyavāsini. She is seated on a golden lotus; three eyed; lightning in complexion. It also states that she is seated by the side of Siva.

Kālī :

- (1) . Seated on ratnaśimhāsana.
Red coloured garments.
4 arms.
Right arms . Left arms
Sūla ; Kapāla
Damaruka .. Pāsa.
- (2) . 4 arms.
Right arms .. Left arms
damaruka .. pāsa
sūla .. kapāla
- (3) . 4 arms.
Right arms . Left arms
sūla .. pāsa
damaruka .. kapāla
- (4) . Blue complexion.
Three eyes.
4 arms.
Right arms .. Left arms
abhaya .. pāsa
sūla .. kapāla
- (5) . White in complexion, wears snake and sisu kundalas.
4 arms.
Right arms . Left arms
sūla . nāga
damaruka .. kapāla

Bhadrā Kālī :

- (1) . Black in complexion, wears red garments.
8 arms.
Right arms .. Left arms
sūla .. kapāla
vetala .. agni sword .. bone damaruka .. shield
- (2) . Varied complexion, golden coloured garments face be smeared with flesh and blood.
14 armed.
Right arms . Left arms
sūla .. sakti

kunta cakra musala tomara bell pāsa order not given.

sankha
 standard plough fire vajra shield

(3) 4 arms.
Right arms
sūla sword

Left arms
kapāla
 shield

(4) Standing in ālīdhā pose four lions.
 18 arms.
Right arms
akṣhamāla sūla sword shield arrow bow sankha
cakra
sruk

Left arms
sruva kamandalu danda sakti mrga agni abhaya varada
pātra

(5) Three eyes
 snake breast-band.
 10 arms.
Right arms
sūla
vajra sword gada axe

Left arms
sakti lotus pāsa bone kapāla

Mahakali :

(1) Black complexion terrific countenance.
 4 arms.
Right arms
katvāṅga

Left arms
kapāla

duṇḍubī

(2) ten faces.
 ten legs.
 10 arms.

Right arms

sword cakra mace bow arrow order not given.

Left arms

shield
sūla busundi head
sankha

- (3) Adored by Kshatriyas.
 12 arms.

Right arms

sūla
vajra cakra mace arrow axe

Left arms

alapallava sakti fire pāsa lotus kapāla

Kālīka :

- (1) Adored by Sudras.
 Wears Jatāmakuta,
 8 arms.

Right arms

sūla damaruka sword karavala

Left arms

kapāla
 shield bell vismaya

- (2) 8 arms.

Right arms

sūla
vajra sword nārāca

Left arms

bow gada pāsa
kapāla

Kshetramuṇḍī :

Identical with Tripurā.

Three heads.

Jatāmakuta

very powerful.

6 arms.

Right arms

sūla damaruka
 sword

Left arms

kapāla
pāsa shield

Kālī :

She is with dancing Siva.

Sun, moon and fire are her eyes.

8 arms.

	Right arms parasu fire snake dolahasta ?	Left arms snake dvaja pustaka
Kali :	A two armed Kāli is also described She would hold Kapāla and sula in her arms. Or She may hold plough and pestle.
Cāmunḍa :	Black complexion Three eyes. Terrific countenance. Snake breast-band. Jaṭāmakuta mūṇḍa mālā 8 arms. Right arms sūla ankusa sword vajra
		Left arms pāsa shield bell kapāla
Carmamūṇḍa :	Green complexion. terrific countenance three eyes. Jata garland of skulls. serpent breast-band 8 arms. Right arms sūla cakra vajra arrow
		Left arms bow pāsa sakti kapāla (main manuscript)
Bhairavi :	Adored by Sudras. Black or green complexion. Jaṭāmakuta Bilvamālā breast-band. 16 arms. Right arms sūla cakra
		Left arms alapallava sakti

vajra	bow
pāsa	lotus
tomara	pindipāla
ankusa	pāsa
katvāṅga	vetala
gada	kapāla

Jarjarā :

Adorned by Vaisyas.
Black or golden complexion.
Jasāmakuṣa. terrific countenance
three eyes.
14 arms.

Right arms

sūla
vajra cakra gada axe arrow nārāca

Left arms

Vismaya
sakti bow pāsa nāga kapāla
bell

Laghuspāmala :

Is the personification of first mensuration and is called pratama Pushpini; wears red garments bears Vina in her arms. Another description says she is four armed with vina in the two arms and liquor vessel in the left arm.

Rājamātangi :

Seated on ratnāsana with one of her leg on a lotus pedestal; black in colour; listening to the parrot; bears crescent moon, wears black garments; plays on vina with her two arms.

Indrākshi Devī :

Two armed holding Vajra in the right and varada in the left arm; wears the yellow garment; adorned with ornaments.

Tulajā Bhavāni :

Red in colour with smiling face wearing pearl jewellery holding amritha kalasa in one arm and laddle in the other.

Bhuvanēsvari :

Resembles the rising sun in colour, bears crescent moon; three eyes, seated on a lotus holds Pāsa, ankusa, abhaya and varada.

Angālamman :

Red in colour, two eyed; holding lotus in both her arms wearing karaṇḍamakuda.

Sivaduti :	Holds in her left arms a patra , gada , shield and pasa and in the right lotus, axe, sword and ankusa .
Annapūrni :	Sindura in complexion; three eyed, holds pasa , ankusa , abhaya and varada in her arms.
Kāmesi :	Holds pasa , sugarcane bow, a patra with liquor, ankusa , flower arrow and varadamudra ; red in colour and three eyed.
Bala :	Holds akshamāla , pusthaka , abhaya and varada .
Māri :	Wears Agnikesa , Damaruka , sūla , katga , kapāla , seated.
Kamakoti :	Holds padma , akshamala , abhaya and Uroahasta ; karaṇḍamakuta or jaṭāmakuta wears crescent moon. She is called Sivasakti in manuscript (collection of Vaithya-nātha Sthapati) or she may be shown with two arms holding uthpala and kataka or she may hold Padma and kundika . In this aspect she is called Brahmamsi .
Manonmani :	Resembles moon in colour, five faced ten armed, holding sūla , tanka , padma , abhaya , pāsa , varada , ankusa , bell, padma and fire. A variation of the same deity with four arms is also shown, in which case she holds lotus, abhaya , varada and utpala .
Mahishāsuramardini :	Black in colour, eight armed, terrific deity, holds cakra , sūla , kadga , Padma in right arms; in left arms sankha , dvaja , shield and patra .
Cauri :	She is represented either seated or standing with either two or four arms. When endowed with four arms, she would hold akshamālā , ankusa , pāsa and mātulinga fruit in her arms. Variations are also noticed Mrga , parasu , varada and abhaya are prescribed in certain texts, while yet others prescribe pasa , ankusa , abhaya and varada . While the later two forms are quite common, images with mātula fruits are rare though akshamālā and pasa in the upper arms are well known.
Saptamātas :	All most all the silpa texts describe the Saptamātas with only four arms holding respective emblems. One manuscript (Mss.13) in Mahabalipuram collection gives more arms to these goddess. They are as follows.
Brāhmi :	(1) 4 arms.   Right arms akshamālā abhaya   Left arms kunḍika varada

	(2) 6 arms. Right arms varada mṛga sūtra	Left arms pustaka kuṇḍika abhaya
Māhesvarī:	(1) 4 arms. Right arms mṛga abhaya	Left arms parasu varada
	(2) 5 faces-10 arms. Right arms sword vajra sūla parasu abhaya	Left arms varada pāsa bell nāga ankusa
Kaumārī:	(1) 4 arms. Right arms Vajra abhaya	Left arms sakti varada
	(2) 6 heads-12 arms. Right arms varada sakti patāka danda patra arrow	Left arms bow bell lotus cock axe abhaya

VII

TANTRISM IN MONUMENTAL ART

Though the worship of Sakti as the Primordeal mother is well-known in the Tamil country from the beginning of the Christian era, no temple assignable to that era has come down to us so far. However, a small copper figure (mother goddess?) hardly 3" in length, has been found among a number of grave goods, assignable to the megalithic period from Adicchanallur in Thirunelveli District. The date of Adicchanallur urn burials has not been fixed with any measure of accuracy, but a period around 8th Century B.C. has been suggested.

Only from about the reign of the Pallavas, monumental art appears in Tamil land. Till recent times, it was believed that only from the time of Mahendravarman (600 A.D.) sculptural art was introduced in the Tamil region, but in recent years several hero-stones dated in the reign of Mahendra's father Simhavishnu and grandfather Simhavarman have been brought to notice and showing the figures of warriors who fought and died in battles or skirmishes. In some cases these memorial stones are found within the premises of Kali temple but their association is local. However the sculptures of Durga are found in Cave temples excavated in the reign of Mahendravarman.

In the reign of Mahendra

In Pallava region, we do not come across any monument, which could be firmly dated earlier than the time of Mahendravarman I. All most all the known monuments of Mahendra are excavated cave-temples, baring a few pillars found at the Ekamabaresvara temple of Kanchi, that bear his titles. These pillars are of no use to our study as they carry no carvings.

Of the cave temples of Mahendra, some are dated with the help of inscriptions while others are assigned to his period on grounds of style. In the absence of inscriptions the dating of uninscribed caves, has been a matter of controversy among scholars. It would therefore be appropriate to take first the dated monuments of Mahendra I for the present study. The cave temples from the following places Mandagappattu, Mamandur, Pallavaram, Vallam, Trichirappalli, Siyamangalam and Mahendravadi bear Mahendra's inscriptions. In some of these places there are more than one cave, as for example at Trichy, Mamandur and Vallam. But in all these places we take only the inscribed caves. The cave temples at Mandagappattu, Mamandur, Pallavaram and Trichirappalli bearing his inscriptions carry no image of Goddess, in any of her aspect.

Vallam

At Vallam, the cave I, was excavated by Skandasena, the son of Vasantapriyaraaja, a subordinate of Mahendra. The temple is dedicated to Siva. On either side of the cave, the facade carries niches; the one on the South carries a fine relief of Ganesa and the northern one carries a worn out image of Jyeshtha. With both legs hanging down she is shown seated with a slim body. Sri K.R. Srinivasan in his Pallava Cave temples holds that these are not contemporary with cave temple but are later since according to him, there could be no image of Ganesa in the time of Mahendra I. We do not agree with this suggestion. Since the images of Ganesa and Jyeshtha are seen flanking in the inscribed excavated cave, we are justified in taking them as coeval with the cave. Here then is a temple of the time of Mahendra, having an image of Goddess Jyeshtha, in the north, along with an image of Ganesa in the south. Jyeshtha is shown alone without her son and daughter who are represented in most of the cases.

Siyamangalam

The cave temple at Siyamangalam, called Avanibhātana Pallavēsvaram, is a Mahendra foundation. Since it bears Mahendra's inscription, it is a good example of his period. In one of the Pillars, is shown Siva as Vrshabhāntika. "Siva is shown standing four armed, the upper two holding mṛga and akṣhamālā, lower right in kaṣṭi and lower left resting by the elbow on the intervined face of the bull..... In front of the bull and to the left of Siva, stands Pārvati, in tribhanga, two armed, the left arm in kaṣṭi and the right holding a flower. She wears a jaṭāmakuṭa like Siva and stands under a tree." This is perhaps one of the earliest representations of the Goddess now, surviving.

Thiruchi

Of the other notable temple of Mahendra, Thiruchirappalli, upper rock-cut cave is the most important. It is called Laliānkura Pallavesvaragrham in inscription after one of Mahendra's title. It has a sanctum now empty and an excellent image of Gangādhara carved on the wall facing the sanctum. In the Gangādhara panel, there is no image of Pārvati, but Mahendra's inscription in this temple is interesting.

It says that Pārvati the daughter of Himavān, remains ever seated by her Lord in this cave temple caused to be made by Mahendra. This is essentially a poetic expression—one of the finest expressions to be found in epigraphs. This has however made scholars to believe that Mahendra installed an image of Pārvati along with Śiva in this temple. In the sanctum of this temple are two sockets cut in the floor. Describing these sockets Sri K.R. Srinivasan says "Right in the centre of the floor is cut a socket 2 feet square and about 2½ feet deep and to the north of it, between it and the wall of the side is a shallower oblong pit 2 feet×1 foot and about 9 inch deep cut longitudinally. While the central pit could have accommodated the representation of Siva, as Mahendravarman mentions in his inscriptions, the pit to its north might have contained a bas-relief of Pārvati mentioned in the same inscription. Perhaps she was shown as facing the central deity as if worshipping it from its north side, which is the conventional position for a devi or for one performing archana".

In our opinion this suggestion is untenable. Sri K.R. Srinivasan has come to the above conclusions for two reasons. 1) that there were no lingas under worship in the sanctum during the time of Mahendravarman, and 2) the deity installed was in the form of a Sakalamūrti, anthropomorphic image and not a linga. In this connection there is a verse in the same inscription of Mahendra, which refers to the main deity as linga. To justify the stand taken by him, Sri K.R. Srinivasan is at great pains to show that the word linga in the inscription does not mean linga. We have shown elsewhere that this stand is untenable. The verse in discussion unquestionably refers to the linga installed by Mahendra in the temple. A such the central socket in the sanctum was intended to receive the lower part of the linga.

In many a Pandya rock-cut caves of the region like Pilaiyarpatti and Thirumeyyam, there are sockets in the sanctum, just underneath the gamukha of the linga pīṭha. (It must also be mentioned that in these cases the linga is rock-cut). This socket was in all probability intended to collect the abhiseka water. As such the second socket in the Thiruchirappalli cave, was intended to collect the abhisheka water and not for an image of Goddess Pārvati.

Other caves

Before leaving Mahendra's period, we will discuss three more cave temples. The Ranganātha cave in Singavaram village in South Arcot District is an important cave temple of the period. It bears no inscription but is assigned to the reign period of Mahendra I, by Dubriuel and to the reign of Mahāmalla or even Paramesvara by K.R. Srinivasan. This is a cave temple dedicated to Vishnu as Anantasāyi whose image is carved on the back wall of the sanctum. In the south side of the facade, is a niche containing a carved sculpture of Durgā. Devi is shown standing in tribhanga pose, placing her right leg over the Mahisha's head and the left firmly planted on the ground. In her four arms, the upper right holds cakra and the left sankha, while both her lower arms are placed on thigh an unusual representation. To her right is shown a sturdy, fierce looking devotee, kneeling, holding something in his right arm while the left is placed on his thigh. Sri K.R. Srinivasan suggests that this man is piercing his own hand with a dagger and is letting blood out as a form of blood offering. To the left of Devi is shown another kneeling devotee with his left over his hip and holding the right arm in the pose of adoration.

The association of Durga with the Vishnu temple is not a surprise. Similar Durga panels occur at Mamallapuram, in the Varāha and Adivarāha cave temples.

Thiruchi Lower Rock-cut Cave

The lower rock-cut cave at Thiruchirappalli, (Pl. 1) is an important temple for the present study. Considering this as a latter temple, Sri K.R. Srinivasan, has not described this cave in his work. The sculptures are absolutely Pallava in style and are to be dated to 7th century A.D. In our opinion it immediately follows the upper rock-cut cave in the same hill excavated by Mahendra. This must be assigned to the first half of the 7th century.

This cave has two sanctums one on either side of the side walls. One is dedicated to Siva and the other to Vishnu. At the back wall facing the entrance are shown a row of deities, all of them standing identical heights and adored by devotees. The central image is that of Brahma. With Siva and Vishnu in the sanctum and Brahma occupying the central part of the hind wall; this constitutes the unit of three Primordeal deities of the Hindu pantheon. To the right of Brahma are shown Ganesa and Kārtikeya in separate niches, and to the left are shown Sūrya and Durgā also in separate niches.

All the five deities shown at the back wall of the cave, are flanked by devotees below and flying figures at the top. Thus this cave temple gives equal importance to seven deities, Siva, Vishnu, Brahma, Ganesa, Kārtikeya, Sūrya and Durgā. Each of these deities, was adored as Primordeal deity by the respective sect of the Hindu religion. The adorers of these deities constitute the major sects of the Hindu religion.

There is a tradition which groups the major sects of the Hindu religion as Shanmatha, the six cults, which includes Saivism, Vaishnavam, Gānapathyam, Kaumāram, Sauram and Sāktam, each claiming their respective deity as the Primordeal God. The worship of Brahma did not develop as an independent cult. Among the six cults, the Sākta cult centered around the worship of Durga, as suggested by this panel.

The cave temple dedicated to Vishnu, and excavated by Mahendra at Mahendravadi, bears no image of Durga. There are a few cave temples, brought under Mahendra style, by K.R. Srinivasan and others, which we will discuss under Rājasimha in the 8th century A.D. The most important of such monuments are at Mamallapuram.

MAMALLAPURAM

The most important site for the study of Sakti cult in the Pallava period, is Mamallapuram. Mamallapuram abound in monumental architecture, cave temples, monoliths, structural temples and bas reliefs. It is well known that the finest representation in Indian art of Sakti, as Mahishasuramardini, is found in this site which is often described as a moving picture in stone. Besides this Mahishasuramardini, Sakti appears as Durga, and Candikā in various forms and also in association with both Siva and Vishnu.

Authorship of Mamallapuram

The monuments at Mamallapuram are assigned to a succession of Pallava rulers beginning from Mahendra I, but mostly to Narasimha I, and a few to Paramesvara I. But I have assigned all the monuments to Rājasimha, in an article "New light on Mamallapuram" published in 1962.

The main reasons for assigning them to Rājasimha are:-

1. The greatest event in the life of Mahamalla is the conquest of Vatāpi which is not mentioned in the Mamallapuram inscriptions.
2. The greatest event in the life of Paramesvara is the conquest of Chālukya Vikramāditya which also is not found in the epigraphs of Mamallapuram.
3. Therefore there is no inscription of Narasimha I or Paramesvara I at Mamallapuram.
4. The inscriptions at Ganesa ratha, and Dharmarāja Maṇḍapa which are repetitions of Rājasimha's inscriptions at Saluvankuppam specifically state that the king caused the temple to be made.
5. The Tittle, Atyantakāma appearing in many monuments of Mamallapuram is the exclusive title of Rājasimha proved by his other inscriptions.
6. The Dharmarāja ratha, Dharmarāja maṇḍapa, and Ganesa ratha are called Atyantakāma Pallavesvara grhas after the title of Rājasimha, and
7. That Rājasimha has employed varieties of scripts, inscriptions, architecture and sculpture in his known monuments show that he was a lover of variety, also seen in the monuments of Mamallapuram.

A few attempts have been made to subject my above views to critical examination. Though these views are based on what is called architectural or sculptural evolutions, almost all the scholars now begin to agree that all the inscriptions at Mamallapuram belong to Rājasimha. They suggest that these monuments were there early and that Rājasimha misappropriated these monuments to himself, by inscribing his epigraphs. However my objections to their view is fundamental. These are foundation inscriptions in which the king specifically states that he caused the temples to be made. If such foundation inscriptions are held as misappropriations, with no evidence to the existence of the monuments earlier, there will then be no way of dating any monument in the world. Any inscription can be dubbed as a misappropriation. As such I feel that no argument has been put forth to disclaim my suggestion on valid grounds. I therefore discuss all the monuments of Mamallapuram as the creations of Rājasimha.

Instead of discussing representations of Saktis under various monuments, it would be easy to study them under various iconographic aspects. In doing so we hold that after the period of Mahendra I, the period of Rājasimha is the most important stage in the distribution of Sakti images.

In Mamallapuram, there are a number of cave temples, dedicated to Siva, Vishnu and Durga. A few of them are solely dedicated to Durga.

Kotikkal Maṇḍapa

The cave temple at the northern end of the village, now called Kotikkal maṇḍapa is undoubtedly a monument dedicated to Durga. It is a simple maṇḍapa-type cave temple with only one row of pillars at the outer end. The sanctum projects into the maṇḍapa, with a flight of steps. At the beginning of the step is a moon slab. No carving representing the deity is inside the sanctum, now plain. The sanctum is shown on a raised adhishtāna, which is of the Pratibandha variety. Flanking the sanctum are shown female guardians, the dvārapālikas, closely resembling the ones in the Draupadi ratha dedicated to Durga. The dvārapālika to the north of the sanctum, stands in tribhanga pose, with her legs crossed, holding a long curved sword in her right arm and resting her left arm on a shield. The dvārapālika to the south of the sanctum, also shown in tribhanga pose stands with her left arm placed on her hip and the right holding a lofty bow, planted before her. Besides the Draupadi ratha, the Durga panel in the Ādivarāha cave also carries similar dvārapālikas holding sword and bow. Though there is no image of the deity inside the sanctum of the Kotikkal maṇḍapa, the presense of the dvārapālikas unmistakably suggests that this is a cave temple dedicated to Durga. Further this shows that Maṇḍapa-type temples were also dedicated to Durga.

Regarding the date of this cave temple, Sri K.R. Srinivasan states that the title Vāmāṅkuśa, is neither one of the known epithets of Mahendra I, nor of Māmalla. "It appears to be the title of a chieftain, perhaps a subordinate to the Pallavas, who excavated the cave temple". Srinivasan goes a step further and states that the title appears to be that of one of the Telugu chola kings. I think there is no need to postulate a Telugu chola origin to this cave. In the Kailasanātha temple of Kanchi, the title Jñānankusa is found as one among the three hundred titles of Rājasimha. In the Dharmarāja ratha, the same king had the title Vāma. Since both the names Vāma and ankuśa are found among Rājasimha's titles, this cave was also a foundation of Rājasimha.

Mahishāsura Rock-cut Cave

To the north of the sea-shore temple is this rock-cut cave dedicated to Durga. On the northern face of this rock is shown a prancing lion, mauling a huge Mahishāsura. Mahishāsura is shown in a helpless condition, caught at the back by the devouring lion with one of his left arm thrown up in despair and the right holding the heavy club tucked in his arm pit. The mighty asura with his crest fallen, is screaming with pain, being unable to bear the onslaught of the lion.

The role played by the Devi's lion, in the battle between Mahishāsura and Devi is graphically described in the Devi Māhātmya. The lion, terrifying the battle-field with its mighty roar wrought havoc in the enemy's camp.

स च सिंहो महानाथं वत्सुजन् वृत्तकेसरः ।
छातीरेभ्यः अमरारीणां वसून् इव विचिन्वति ॥

In the battle that ensued between Devi and Mahishāśura, the asura began assuming many forms. He took the form of a lion; when its head was cut he assumed the form of a man; when the human figure was slain, he took the form of an elephant and dragged the Mahasimha of the Devi with its trunk, shouting the battle cry. When Devi cut the trunk of the elephant, the asura again assumed the form of Mahisha.

—ततो सो नूत् महागजः ।
करेण च महा सिंहं स चक्रेण जययन्त्र ।
कूर्चतः तु करं देवी सङ्ग्रेण निरकृतत ।
ततो महासुरो भूयः माहिषं वपुराश्रितः ॥
(3-31-33)

What we see at the Mahishāśura rock is exactly the opposite of this scene, the Mahāsimha (great lion) jumping on the head of asura, drags him with its right paw clinching his shoulder; the asura with his back turned to the lion, tries to escape from the clutches of the roaring lion but without success (Pl. 2). This is a finest portrayal of the fight between the animals, the lion and buffalo.

The cave proper is on the eastern face of the rock, and consists of a shrine cell, shown on an adhishtāna of the pratibandha type, consisting of upāna, padma jagati, vyti kumuda and prati. The cell is flanked by lion-based pilasters. On either side are shown dvārapālikas. Inside the cell is shown an eight armed Durga. No steps are shown. The colossal figure of Mahishāśura has given the name to this rock-cut cave.

The Tiger-cave at Saluvankuppam

The Yāli maṇḍapa, popularly called the Tiger-cave at Saluvankuppam about two miles north of Mamallapuram must also be considered here. On the north face of the rock can be seen an attempt to cut a seated lion with a square socket in its abdomen, resembling the seated lion with Durga in its abdomen in the sea-shore temple. The yāli maṇḍapa may also be considered a dedication to Durga. Fanciful theories are put-forth in recent years regarding this cave. One view holds this as an utsava mandapa, where the processional deities were brought and placed on audience when the king himself witnessed the festival. The utterly unfinished pilaster between the elephant, is claimed as Indradhvaja (with no parallel either in the Pallava or post Pallava sculptures) to justify the claim.

What makes this the most fascinating cave temple of all the Mamallapuram caves, is the bewitching row of yāli heads, arranged as a circular aureole around the cave temple. This arrangement is so unique and charming, that it has a captivating beauty. The cave in the centre, is plain without any image carved at the back wall. The entrance of the shrine is adorned with lion-based pilasters, the lions being shown in rearing position with mounted soldiers. On either side are recesses cut deep without any sculpture. Steps leading to the cave are flanked by seated lions. The two seated elephants with howdas on their back and the horse, shown south of the yāli maṇḍapa, must be considered pure artistic creations, with no functional motives. This group, consisting of the yāli maṇḍapa, elephants, horse and the lion are the creations of Rājasimha.

A small replica of the yāli maṇḍapa is carved on a low-crop, south of the shore temple. By its side are some other carvings, showing sedent and recumbant lion. As these are weather-worn it is difficult to describe their cult association. But one thing is certain these are creations motivated by purely aesthetic appeal rather than ritual or functional needs.

There is one monument which we have to discuss as a temple solely dedicated to Durga and that is the monolith called Draupadi ratha. We will discuss this under temples to Durga. There is another group of monoliths Piḍāri rathas that need mention on account of their association with the word Piḍāri. These are two unfinished monoliths at the western end of the village. Since these two monoliths are near a Piḍāri temple, they came to be called Piḍāri rathas. Otherwise they have nothing to suggest that they were dedicated to Piḍāri. Being left unfinished and with no sculpture to suggest its dedication, we will not venture to say to which deity these were intended.

Draupadi Ratha : (Durga Temple)

Among the monuments at Mamallapuram, the so called Draupadi ratha is the most important with reference to the Sakti cult in Tamilnad. It is perhaps the earliest surviving temple proto-type, dedicated to Durga.

The name Draupadi ratha is a misnomer. Since there are five monoliths here, the common people called all these monoliths after the name of the Pāndava brothers and the temples came to be called Panca Pāṇḍava rathas; normally the names of Dharma, Bhima, Arjuna, Nakula and Sahadeva should have been associated; however in view of the fact that inside this sanctum there is an image of Durga, the common people called this temple Draupadi ratha, after the wife of the Panca Pāṇḍavas. In fact it is a pure and simple Durga temple. It is also interesting to note that the monoliths are clearly modelled out of the already existing structures. Hence the Draupadi ratha, may be taken to portray really the Durga temples that existed then. Mention has been made earlier, while discussing Silappadhikarma, that the temple of a Goddess was referred to as Kuccara Kutisal, a hut of Kurchara. It is significant therefore that the Durga temple at Mamallapuram is in the form of a hut. (Pl. 3).

The monolith Draupadi ratha, shares a broad and elaborate upapiṭha with the adjoining Arjuna ratha (Pl. 4). The adhishtana is of the Pādabandha variety consisting upāna, jagati, tripatṭa kumuda and prati. The prati portion has suffered damage. A series of slots have been cut to insert stones to finish the prati at a later stage. The wall is of simple variety with pilasters at the corners. Over this raises the super structure in the form of a hut. The corners of the hut are adorned with foliage designs. The stupa made of stone is now preserved in the ground. Above the entrance is a fine makara torana. There are niches flanking the entrance which house Dvārapālikas, Jaya and Vijaya (Pl. 5). The steps leading to the garbhagrha have a candrasila at the beginning. On the outer walls of the garbhagrha at the three sides, are niches housing images of Durga (Pl. 9). All the three are unfinished. All the three niches are topped by makara toranas. Jaya, the Dvārapālika to the north of the entrance, stands with a long sword in her right arm and a shield also long, rested on the ground, on which she is resting her left elbow on the shield. She wears an undergarment and also a breast-band. The sculpture is unfinished. Vijaya, in the southern niche, holds a bow as tall as her planted on the ground. On both the shoulders at the back are shown tūnas. (She is also shown with breast-band).

Inside the sanctum is the most powerfully delineated Durga standing on a lotus (Pl. 6). She stands like a warrior with full of "built-in" power, four armed. The prayoga cakra is in the upper right arm but the corresponding left is broken. The lower right is in abhaya and the left is on the thigh. Her lower left garment, is like that of warriors with heavy median loops and side tassels extending upto the ground. There is a broad breast-band. The necklace is interesting with a bell like pendent in the middle. There is also a mangala sūtra with tiger's nails as māṅgalya. Heavy patrakundalas adorn her ears. Jatāmakuta characterise her head. The Devi here is not shown as a young virgin, but as a full blown youth, commanding respect and reverence. By the side of her feet are shown two warrior devotees one on either side. The warrior to her right is kneeling before her holding his own head with the left arm and severing the neck with a sword with a grim determination in fulfilment of his vow (Pl. 7). The head turned up, with muscles and chin drawn in, depict the quality of the sacrificer. Nothing will swerve him from this supreme sacrifice. He is a majestic personality, who draws our admiration. Seated to her left is another kneeling figure with both arms folded in anjali, adoring the Devi, who is receiving the supreme sacrifice of the other. Above the Devi are shown two ganas (Pl. 8) one on each side. They are tough guys, two of them with moustaches and sturdy swords rested on their shoulders. The other two are adoring the Devi. In front of the ratha is cut a standing lion, representing the mount of the Devi.

This temple has certain features that deserve special mention. The Durga inside the sanctum is standing on a lotus pedestal and not on the head of a buffaloe. This shows the Devi stands in the sanctum not as the destroyer of Mahisha but as the Parādevata, the supreme Goddess, standing on the sacred lotus seat, adored by all. It is of interest to note that in the Silappadhikāram, the Devi as Durga is said to reside in the heart of Brahma, Vishnu and Siva and their heart is likened to a lotus. She is also said to remain as an effulgent light in that heart. On the three walls of the garbhagrha, the same Devi is shown as Durga, with the one at the back (Pl. 9), standing on the Mahisha's head. Just as Iccā Sakti, Kriyā Sakti and Jñāna Sakti are shown around the garbhagrha of later Amman shrines so also here Durga images are shown on all the three sides. So the tradition of placing Sakti images in the garbhagrha niches of the Amman shrines, could be traced back to 8th century A.D.

The orientation of the temple to the west need no special attention since it follows the other three monoliths all of which face west. But it is significant to note that the Durga temple is in the North in the whole group. Durga is always assigned the Northern direction and is called Vaḍavāyil Chelvi, the darling of the northern quarters. It is possible, the northern most monolith has been deliberately chosen for Durga. Many temples solely dedicated to Durga exist, but none of them have retained their original structure. At Uttaramerur, the Durga temple, with a Pallava sculpture, is in its original position in the northern side of the village but its shrine or superstructure can hardly be considered original. In the absence of any original Durga temple that could be dated to early mediaeval period, we may hold that the Draupadi ratha is the only earliest surviving temple that has preserved to us the early traditions of an independent Durga temple.

Mention has been made earlier that in Pallava period, Durga cult was a predominant one. We find her as an independent deity in the Draupadi ratha and also in the Koṭikkal maṇḍapa. She also appears in rock-cut caves dedicated both to Siva and Vishnu, besides the structural temple at the sea-shore.

Durga in Vishnu Caves

In two Vishnu cave temples, Durgā is shown. They occur in Varāha and Ādivarāha cave temples. Before discussing the detailed description of the deity, one significant point needs attention. In both the cave temples she appears in association with Lakshmi. Both the cave temples face west. In both instances, Durgā is present to the south of the garbhagrha and Lakshmi is to the north. The particular position of Durgā is prescribed in Marīci Samhita (Dakṣiṇe Srih Vāme Harinim ca) (P. 57) and these seem to conform the above convention.

In the Ādivarāha cave, Durga is shown with eight arms and holds cakra, sword, bell and kapāla in the right arms and conch, shield, bow and parrot in the left arms. Below her left leg is the head of Mahisha while the right is bent and placed on the ground at the back. Above her right is shown a trident on a long shaft. The Devi stands in delightful pose with moving limbs and graceful bends of the body. By the side of her feet, one on either side, are human figures both holding flowers and adorning the Devi. Above the Devi are shown ganas carrying vessels and chouri. Further a lion is shown on the right and deer on the left side of the Devi. Jayā and Vijayā are also shown on either side of Durga. Jayā holds a sword in her right arm and rests her left on the shield. Vijayā holds the long bow. Both these attendants of the Devi may be considered the best representations of the theme in Mamallapuram.

In the Varāha maṇḍapa, the main sanctum is empty. But owing to the presence of Varāha and Trivikrama, the cave has been rightly considered a shrine dedicated to Vishnu. Recent researches have shown that the Dvārapālas of this cave temple are Vishnu's Āyudha puruṣas. In this Vishnu cave, Durga is shown to the south of the sanctum, standing not on the head of Mahisha but on a lotus seat. This four armed deity holds cakra, sankha, abhaya and kati hastas as in the Draupadi ratha but is some what less vibrant. The two devotees are shown in this panel as well. The one to her right is facing the Goddess with his back turned towards the spectator and is severing his own head. The other fellow is seated in adoration. Above are shown two ganas on either side flying. Further above are shown a lion to the right and a deer to the left. The Devi is shown with a parasol above her head. In the Draupadi ratha lion, deer and the parasol are absent.

In the Varāha and Ādivarāha caves, the niche to the north of sanctum carries the image of Sṛidevi. She is seated on a high lotus seat and holds lotuses in both her arms. Above her are shown two elephants, both carrying water vessels, one pouring water over the head of the Devi. Two female attendants are shown carrying vessels on either side of the Devi. Both panels are remarkable sculptures, the one at the Ādivarāha cave being the finest representation of Lakshmi in Pallava art.

Durga in Trimurti Cave

Before we take up the Siva caves, it would be interesting to study the representation of Durga in the Trimurti Cave. The cave has three sanctums excavated on the rock face, which are dedicated to Subrahmanya, Siva and Vishnu. To the south of this group is carved an image of Durgā, standing on the head of a Mahisha with 8 arms. Cakra, arrow, sword with bell and abhaya are in the right arms. The left arms carry sankha, bow, shield and kaṣihasta. The Devi wears heavy lower garments and breast-band. There is a channavira on her body. Above the sculpture is a makaratorana. We have seen that this cave temple is dedicated to Guha, Siva and Vishnu, with Siva in the centre and in this temple dedicated to three deities, Durgā is seen occupying a place.

Durga in Siva Caves

There are a number of Siva caves in Mamallapuram; some of them are inscribed just as the Dharmarājamaṇḍapa, which calls it an Isvaragṛha, but only two temples had sculptured panels of deities and they are the Rāmānuja mandapa and Mahishāsura-mardini cave. In the Rāmānuja mandapa, the sculptures have been chiselled off at a later date. The back wall of the sanctum shows clear traces of a Somaskanda panel. On the south wall was a Durga, very much similar to the Ādivarāha cave and on the northern wall a Gajalakshmi but both the sculptures have been completely obliterated.

Mahishāsura-mardini

The Mahishāsura-mardini panel, is the greatest product of Indian genius and is a veritable epic in stone (Pl. 10). It has rightly received the admiration of the world.

The cave temple carrying this master piece, is dedicated to Siva and carries an image of Somaskanda in the sanctum. There are two side cells one on either side; but to whom they were dedicated is not very clear. The cave itself faces east. In the northern wall, facing south is the famous Mahishāsūramardini and on the opposite side Vishnu is shown as Anantasayi. It has been pointed out by many scholars that the Association of Mahishāsūramardini and Anantasāyi Vishnu recall Devi mātmya.

The Mahishāsūramardini panel is skilfully planed. There are as many as eighteen figure sculptures in this panel, all of them neatly distributed in space, each falling in its own position, each vying with each other suggesting the great moment of victory. The central figure is Devi seated on the prancing lion aiming an arrow. Mounted firmly on the lion, turns her body and head slightly to give force to the drawn arrow. A long sword whose power is yet to be commanded is held across passively in the lower right arm. The war bell that could produce infinite and terrific noise, loud enough to drown the mighty roar of the monster is in the other arm. The cakra the embodiment of Vishnu's power is in the other right arm. As if to suggest that the bow itself is sufficient to demolish the might of Asura the bow is held firmly in the extended left arm. The other arms hold sankha, pāsa and shield. The presence of shield is so insignificantly shown that the Devi seems to have no use for it. A parasol held above the head of the Devi by a female dwarf is in tune with the movement of the scene. Around the Devi are shown dwarfs forming a mandala. Most of them carry weapons, sword and shield or bow and arrow; all moving forward to strike. One carries a fly-whisk and yet another a plate carrying plate full of delicious food for the immanent victory-feast. There is only one female attendant who is in fore front striking powerfully. She has already felled an asura lying dead in front of her.

The mighty asura, who caused the universe to tremble and whose power and valour drove even the very Creator, Indra and other Gods to run hither and thither for shelter, stands before the Devi, occupying a greater part of the panel by his broad and tall body. The whole weight of the asura is now thrown on his left leg, the right leg being dragged in retreat. The powerful gada with which he reigned supreme has now suddenly become heavy. He can no more whirl it around with his powerful right arm. Its weight is now supported by the left arm. With his body already beginning to turn back, he is clearly in retreat, a retreat that is to cause him his final doom. But yet his demonic nature is latent. He is obstinate, unwilling to yield, turning his grim and determined face to see whether he could still offer battle. The Asura who can fly, leap and cause havoc in the field has been pinned to the ground and his fatal fall is only a matter of moment. His army of soldiers are still in a worse condition. One is seen on the ground with his body severed, dying in anguish. Another pathetically falling dead with head and arms drooping down. Another one above the asura is shown as if praying for his life. To the left of the asura is one falling flat, supporting his weight with the left arm. The right is pointing to the immanent defeat. His eyes, feeling shy to face the defeat, leave no doubt about the final outcome. Above him is another soldier drawing back both his sword and shield is ready to flee turning his back. Further up is another figure with his face, completely turned back in utter defeat and drops his shield and sword. In between this group, hiding himself behind the Mahishasura, is a tiny figure, full of fear, looking up pathetically to his retreating master.

This panel depicts everything of the Devi group with tremendous striking force and everything of Asura retreating. Master indeed is the sculptor who conceived this scene and executed this so thoroughly and suggestively. We are in front of a world classic.

Nidrarupi

In the south wall of the cave is Vishnu in his cosmic sleep. The Asuras, Madhu and Kaitabha, are in a defiant mood at the feet of the cosmic sleeper. The conch represented as a dwarf and the gada represented as a female, are shown flying in the air. By the side of sleeping Vishnu are shown cakra personified, Mārkaṇḍeya rishi and Bhūdevi all in adoration. Vishnu lying on the Ananta is in supreme sleep which is depicted so blissfully that this panel is also recognised as one of the masterpieces of Pallava art. What does this panel seek to portray and what is the central deity? According to us this panel also portrays Sakti in one of her subtle form as Nidradevi. Nidradevi cannot be portrayed physically. She can only be suggested by portraying some one in deep sleep. In the 'Devi Bhāgavata', the episode is graphically described. Vishnu lies in deep slumber and Brahma praises Nidradevi as Parāmāya. It shows clearly the supreme nature of Sakti. That is what seems to be suggested here.

It is of interest to mention that almost one hundred years later, this Mahishamardini cave, inspired another artist to excavate a similar cave in Malaiyadipatti in Pudukkottai district. There are two cave temples one dedicated to Vishnu as Anantasayin and the other to Siva. In the Siva temple is Mahishamardini resembling the Mahishamardini of Mamallapuram. The cave was excavated by a Muttaraiya chieftain under the Pallava ruler Dantivarman. Obviously this chieftain must have seen the cave at Mamallapuram in the heart of his master's domain and that he conceived a similar monument. It may also be stated that the depiction of Mahishamardini at Mamallapuram so graphically, clearly demonstrates, that the Durga concept was the most popular theme with the Pallavas.

Durga in Shore Temple

In the Sea-shore temple at Mamallapuram, the walls of both the Siva shrines have undergone restoration and have lost most of their original forms and sculptures. However the larger Siva temple called Kshatriyasimha Pallavesvaragrham, has retained the sculptures in their original position. In them we have Durgā portrayed in the northern wall of the ardhamandapa. It is very much obliterated but has the same characteristics as the one in the Kailasanatha temple of Kanchi.

Simha Durga

However in this temple there is an interesting rock-cut figure to the south of the shrines. A seated figure of a lion is carved in situ (Pl. 11). In its belly is cut a square socket and inside this is shown Durgā as Mahishāsūramardini. Durgā is shown seated on the head of Mahisha with 8 arms. Arrow, sword, sula and suci are in the right arms and the left holds bow, sankha, an indistinct emblem, and placed on the knee. On either leg of the lion are seated the dvārapālikas. By the side is a deer reclining but unfortunately its head is broken. So also is the head of the gana standing by the side. The sculpture is one of pure artistic representation with no religious motif but what interests us is the theme of Durgā chosen for such a representation. Mention has been made already, that by the side of the tiger cave at Saluvankuppam an attempt to carve a similar seated lion with a central socket has been made.

Besides the sea-shore temple there are two structural temples at Mamallapuram. One is the Olakkannesvara temple on top of the hill and the other Mukundanāyanār temple on way to Saluvankuppam. The later one has no sculptures on the walls. In the former though there are sculptures on the walls of the main sanctum, the wall of the ardhamandapa is plain. Besides the above, a fragmentary panel showing Vaishṇavi and Varāhi, forming part of Saptamāta group is now preserved in the archaeological survey office at Mamallapuram. It is not known to which temple this group belongs. It probably belongs to the sea-shore temple. The panel is of Rājasimha's period.

Kanchi Temples

Besides the Kailasanātha temple, a few more Pallava temples at Kanchi, also deserve attention.

Iravātāna Temple

The Iravātāna at the entrance to the city is a small structure but it has retained all its sculptures. The temple faces west. In the Northern wall of the ardhamandapa is Durgā, and on the corresponding southern wall is Lakshmi. The main Devakoshtas carry Yōgesvara in the north, Samhara tāndava in the west and Dakshinamurti in the south. The Durga in the northern wall is six armed, holding sankha, cakra, kataka, bow, katihasta and on the chest, aiming an arrow. Over her head are shown two umbrellas. The left leg is placed on the lion and the right is on the ground. She bears ambarātuna. This temple is assigned to the reign of Rājasimha.

Matangesvara

Of the two later Pallava temples assigned to the reign of Nandivarman Pallavamalla, the Matangesvara and Muktesvara deserve mention as they are on an elaborate plan. The Matangesvara some what unfinished, faces west. A part of the eastern wall and the entire southern wall are not sculpted. In the northern wall of the ardhamandapa is Durgā, standing with four arms holding cakra, sankha, abhaya and katihasta. Neither the Mahisha nor the lion is shown at the feet. A parasol is over the head of the Devi. The Devi is flanked on either side by her female attendants. The one to her right holds the sword and shield and to the left a bow. At the south eastern wall of the temple is again shown Durgā, four armed with sankha, cakra, kataka and katihasta. The presence of Durga at the back wall is interesting. Besides these two figures, Cāmuṇḍa is shown dancing with dancing Siva. The sculpture is in the inner face of the mukhamandapa wall. Siva dances the urdhva tāṇḍava with ten arms and Cāmuṇḍa dances by his side with six arms. She wears Jaṭābhāra; in her arms are seen damaruka in one and fire in another.

Muktesvara Temple

In the northern wall of the mukhamandapa is Durga with four arms; sankha, cakra, abhaya and kaṭihasta are in the arms. No Mahisha's head is shown. The two attendants holding sword and shield are on either side.

Durga in Devakoshta of Pallava Temples

The above study of Pallava temples shows clearly that in the northern wall of the ardhamandapa of the Siva temples, Durgā was invariably positioned (wherever sculptural representations are seen). Secondly in none of these instances She is shown standing on the head of Mahisha, which is so common in later times. She is shown with four, six or more arms and sometimes flanked by female attendants wielding sword and bow. In none of these instances the human warriors severing their head or offering flowers, as found in later temples are noticed in the Durga panels of the ardhamandapa.

Panamalai

Before we close the study of Durga in Pallava temples of 8th century, one image in the Panamalai village deserves special mention. There is a hill in the village on top of which is a structural Pallava temple of Rājasimha. The temple has no sculptures on the wall except the Somaskanda inside the sanctum. There are three side shrines, projecting from the garbhagṛha on the three sides. In one of the shrines is an excellent painting of Siva performing Samhāra tāṇḍava. By the side is shown Parvati, resting in a delightful pose witnessing the dance, as Mahātāṇḍava Śakṣiṇī (Pl. 12). The temple bears inscription of Rājasimha on the base.

But what is more significant for our study, is a natural cave at the foot of the hill overlooking the lake. The cave is a natural formation not very deep but narrow. At the end of this cave is installed a delightful Durgā. She stands with her left leg planted on the back of the lion and the right placed on the ground. She is eight armed holding cakra, sword, a five hooded cobra and kaṭihasta in the right arms. In the left arms are bow, conch, suci and placed on the thigh. The strong and sturdy lion faces the front with the right leg lifted up. The secluded surroundings, the cave and the majesty of the sculpture instils inspiration and reverence in the spectator. On the side face of the rock is an oft repeated verse of Rājasimha, which shows that Rājasimha was personally responsible for the selection of the site and theme.

Caṇḍī

We have mentioned that in the Pallava sculptures at Kanci and Mamallapuram, Durgā as Mahishamardini is the dominating theme. However at Mamallapuram occurs what may be considered the most striking example of Caṇḍī (Pl. 13). It is found in the North eastern part of the village amidst a group of Saptamātas. The figure of Caṇḍī is placed in the centre and the rest are on either side. The Caṇḍī which is 4½ feet high and taller than other sculptures alone is an 8th century Pallava sculpture while the rest are late figures probably belonging to 15th century A.D. The Caṇḍī originally should have been an independent deity, not belonging to a Saptamāta group. The Devi is seated in a dignified pose, with both her arms pressing her thigh, characterising her vibrant power. The right arm holds firmly a sharpened dagger, which could tear open the heart of any asuric devil. In the left arm she holds an asura looking like a child. His whole figure from shoulder to his knees is squeezed within the palm of the Devi, his head, hands and legs drooping dead like tiny twigs. The Devi has been able to catch hold of this invincible asura effortlessly. The asura appearing as a little child in her arm, magnifies the might and tremendous personality of the Goddess. There is no other sculpture in the whole of South India which could surpass this finest representation in its expressiveness. True to her nature, her hairs fall on the shoulders as jatābhāra. On the head is a skull. In her right ear Caṇḍi wears a sisu and the left a patrakundala. A string of skulls is worn around her body as Yagnopavita. A breast band is present. A tiger's claw is worn as tālī. In the upper arms the right holds a bell but the left is broken. In the pedestal no figures are shown. That the mere look of the Devi is capable of reducing the entire universe to a waste land is suggested by her round ball like projecting eyes. And yet that she is a benign mother, with full of compassion and is prepared to take under her loving protection the needy souls is brought out vividly by her broad smile which is at the same time reminiscent of the great laughter caṇḍa aṭṭahāsa, so often referred to in literature. This Devi is a true representation of conception of Caṇḍi as it existed in the time of Pallava Rājasimha. We do not know whether the present location of the sculpture is its original position.

THE KAILASANĀTHA TEMPLE OF KANCHI

The Temple

For the study of Sakti cult in the art history of the Tamil country the Kailasanātha temple of Kanchi is an important landmark, not only because it is dated precisely with the help of inscription, but also because of immense variety in the portrayal of Sakti images. The temple was built by the Pallava ruler Rājasimha in the beginning of the 8th century A.D. It consists of a main vimāna, preceded by a mandapa (this mandapa was connected to the main vimāna by an additional structure in later times), and a cloistered enclosure. This cloister has a row of miniature cells running all around. These cells and the prākāra wall carry sculptures of various deities which consist of the benign and terrific aspects of Siva, Sakti and Vishnu, the full complement of Parivāra devatas, the Dikpālas, and the Vāstupada devatas.

At the entrance to this enclosure is another but smaller temple erected by Mahendra, the son of Rājasimha. This also is a Siva temple, provided with a small enclosure, portraying Parivāra devatas on its wall. At the outer side, are smaller Siva temples, built as dedicatory temples by the queens of Rājasimha. The entire wall surfaces of the main temple and the smaller temples are studded with sculptures of deities. Rājasimha, justifiably claims in his inscription here, that this temple was built with sculptural wealth, befitting his fame.

Salle Kailasahlām apaharati grhe Rājasimhēsvarākhye

For an intelligent observer these sculptures will not only reveal the mythology they seek to portray with consummate artistic display, but also the codified architectural and religious principles that guided their distribution. I have shown elsewhere that this temple is built on the Vāstupurusha mandala, the Padavinyāsa being probably on the Mandūkapa variety. In the lay out of temples, the Vimānas are said to represent the Purusha tattva (male principle) and the mandapa in front the female principle (Sakti tattva). In this temple these are fully realised as will be shown in the sequense. Sakti appears in this temple in her various manifestations inside the sanctum, on the walls of sanctum and mandapa, in the miniature cells of the prākāra and also on the prākāra walls, besides the smaller temples in the front.

Somāskanda

While discussing the image of Somaskanda (Pl. 14) we have seen that Sakti is portrayed with Siva and her child Guha inside the sanctum. Thus she shares with her consort Siva, the main ritualistic sanctity.

Uma Portrayed on the Prākāra Wall

In the main prākāra wall of the temple, the Pada devatas and Parivāra devatas are shown. But what is striking is the repeated representations of Uma on the wall besides the Pada devatas and Parivāra devatas. On the prākāra wall of the main shrine alone She is portrayed 18 times. This number 18 should have some significance for all the other portrayals conform to the architectural numberings. We are unable to say what this 18 means in Śakta cult; the numbers 9 and 16 play a prominent role as Navākshari or Shodasākhasari. While discussing the Tamil text Thirumandiram, a certain cakra, Erolī cakra was discussed. It sanctifies the number 18 consisting of 16 letters from a to ah and the two letters ha and ksha, which are said to reside in Visuddhi and Ājñā cakras. It would be too much to suggest that the repetition of Devi 18 times on the walls has anything to do with this cakra, but what could be suggested is the sacredness given to the number 18.

Kanyā

In all these representations, the Devi is shown as a young maiden, (Kanyā) seated on the peak of a mountain under a devine tree. The representation is clearly suggestive of the peak of Meru mountain and the Kadamba tree.

Sumeru Madhya Sringastha

In the Lalitā Sahasranāma, the Devi is said to reside on the peak of Sumeru mountain, Sumerumadhya sringastha. The Syāmālā daṇḍaka, another excellant poem on Devi, extols the Devi seated amidst the Kadamba trees in the middle of the Vilva forest. That the Devi is seated under the wish fulfilling Kalpa tree (Kalpa drumā) is an oft repeated concept.

Vilvātavi madhya Kalpa drumā kalpa Kādamba Kāntāra Vāsaprivā.

Vina Vadini

In two instances, the Devi is shown playing on musical instrument, a Yāl in one instance and Vina (Pl. 15) in another instance. The association of the Devi with music is also a well known concept. She is extolled in Lalita Sahasranāma as Nādarūpa, the very embodiment of sound. The Syāmālā daṇḍaka praises her love of music and says that she is playing Vina made of gems Mānikka Vinām Upalālayanīm. In the hymn Navaratnamālikā the Devi is said to rest the Vina on her left breast while playing it.

Vama kuca nihita vinām.

She is said to be deeply engrossed in the sweet music of Vina.

Vina vādana velā Kampita Sirasam; also Vina rasāsvāda navaṇavollāsam.

The Devi's hand holding the Vina is said to be resplendent.

Vinasankrānta kāntahastāntām.

Adored by Devas, Rishis and Ganas

Another interesting aspect noticed in this group of Devi sculptures, is the presence of sages either seated or standing adoring the Devi. In a number of instances a bearded sage is shown seated in Yoga pose with a Yoga patta going around his knees. He is holding his hands in anjali pose. In other instances the sage is shown standing with a flower in his arm adoring the Devi (Pl. 16). In a few instances nobles with crowns are shown seated below her adoring the Devi and they are clearly the Devas. The Devi is often flanked by female figures wielding fly whisks. In some cases we get dwarfish ganas blowing what looks like conch. Such representation show, that the Devi is adored by the Devas, rishis and ganas. In the Lalita Sahasranāma, the Devi is adored as the Supreme soul, by the Devas, the sages and the ganas, Deva rishi gana sanghāta stūya-mānātma Vaibhavā, which is truly portrayed in these figures. She is also praised as a Swan, residing in the heart of the sages.

Muni mānasa hamsikā.

Mātangi

In as many as ten instances, elephants are portrayed under the seat of the Goddess which suggests the popularity of the association of elephant with Devi. The Goddess is often called Mātangi, the term being explained as the daughter of the sage Matanga. Mātangi also means the daughter of an elephant, or Kirāti. The representation of elephants below the seat suggest the Mātangi aspect of Devi.

Līlāsukapriya

The Devi as shown in this series has another significant aspect. She is shown playing with parrots. About nine sculptures portray parrots by the side of Devi; in some cases, the Devi is shown caressing them fondly. The Syāmālā daṇḍaka refers to this aspect of the Goddess repeatedly as tam sukam kimsukam lālayanīm Parikrīdase. She is said to be fond of playing with parrots Līlā suka priye. In two instances peacocks are shown in place of parrots.

Vanavāsini

That she is a forest dweller is a wellknown concept. This is emphasised by the portrayal of lion, deer or buffaloes besides elephants in the Devi sculptures of Kauchi.

Distribution Pattern

Besides the figure of Pārvati shown on the Prākāra walls, the Devi is shown in different forms among which the Durga aspect is the predominating theme. The pattern of distribution suggests a certain set principles. We will discuss the pattern of distribution in this temple as it is important to understand the distribution of Sakti icons in the later temples.

The smaller temple called the Mahendravarmanesvaragrha, has an enclosure wall of its own. It carries a row of sculptures on the walls facing the inner courtyard. In the front side facing north is shown Durga and facing it on the opposite side is Lakshmi. At the entrance to the bigger courtyard of the main shrine is Durga on the southern side and Lakshmi in the north. This shows Durga and Lakshmi were positioned at the entrance to the prākāras of Siva temples. We have no extent prākāra, later to these, till we come to the end of 9th century A.D. The temple at Perunpaluvur (Kilaiyur) built in the reign of Adityachola, by the Paluvettaraiyar chieftain, has retained its prākāra walls and some of the parivara shrines. There are a few other chola examples as well. In these places we do not get the representations of Durga and Lakshmi at the entrance. The great temple of Tanjore, built by Rajaraja I, in 11th century A.D., has retained the biggest prākāra in its original condition. So also the Siva temple at Gangaikonda Cholapuram. These also do not portray Durga or Lakshmi. However the gopuras erected from the middle chola period at Chidambaram and other places, carry Durga images at the entrance, and facing it are Bhairava images. In later gopuras this practise has been given up.

The cloister cells in the bigger courtyard of the Rājasimhesvara temple, carry the Parivāra devata besides the various aspects of Siva and Vishnu. Beginning from the south-eastern corner, the following images are shown. Ganesa, Durga (Pl. 17), Subrahmanya, Pārvati and forms of Vishnu and Siva. In line with the central sūtra of the garbhagrha, is the Parivāra shrine dedicated to Brahma in the south and on the corresponding northern side is the Parivāra shrine dedicated to Vishnu. To the east of Brahma shrine is Jyeshṭhā on the prākāra wall and to the west is Durga. In the next bay is Saptamātā and in next Candika. In the northern prākāra, the side wall of the Vishnu shrine carries an image of Sarasvati. These are the feminine images distributed on the prākāra wall and its cells. In the main prāsāda, Lakshmi and Sarasvati are shown on the southern wall of the ardhamandapa. In the northern wall of the ardhamandapa are shown Durga in the central niche flanked by Jyeshṭhā on the east and Yogesvari on the west. In all the later temples the northern niche of the ardhamandapa carries Durga images as in this temple.

In the northern wall of the Garbhagrha portion is an interesting group of sculptures. The central panel depicts Siva as Tripurāntaka. In front of him is shown Durga as Simhavahini, shown in fighting pose holding the bow in position and drawing an arrow; the lion is in prancing stance. It is interesting to mention that in the great temple of Tanjore, inside the sandhara passage, are excellent paintings of the chola period. In the northern wall, is depicted what may be called the most excellent painting of Tripurāntaka ever depicted in Indian art. The point worthy of note is that the representation of Tripurāntaka is also in the northern wall as in the Kailasanatha temple of Kanchi. In the painting, Durga is also shown as Simhavāhini, attacking the

In the Kailasanatha temple to the east of Tripurāntaka is shown Tripura Bhairavi seated. The Tanjore painting also portrays Bhairavi as Kali in the Tripurāntaka scene. The presense of Tripurāntaka, Tripura Durga and Tripura Bhairavi in the northern wall of the garbhagrha in both the temples could not be accidental but point to certain conventions.

In the front mandapa of the Kailasanatha temple of Kanchi, are shown Devi images at the four corners. Lakshmi and Sarasvati are shown in the Southern side and Durga and Jyeshthā are shown in the northern side. We have seen similar representations in the Vimāna portion as well. In the Piravataua temple of Kanchi, assigned to Rajasimha's period, Lakshmi is shown in the southern side of the ardhamandapa and Durga in the northern wall of the ardhamandapa. In the great temple, of Tanjore and Gangaikonda Cholapuram, Lakshmi is shown in the south side of the Mahāmandapa and Sarasvati in the northern side. Durga is shown in the North, facing northern direction. It is therefore evident that the images of Durga, Lakshmi, Sarasvati and Jyeshthā in the Mahāmandapa of the Kailasanatha temple conforms to ritual needs.

It may be mentioned that the maṇḍapa itself is considered a Sakti, Mandaparūpini. Aghorasambhup's paddhati, prescribes the worship of Mandaparūpi devata as dvārasya sammukhīm syāmām Pushpa ratnaugha varshinīm dhyātva āvāhya yayet vidvān Smaret Mandaparūpinīm.

(P. 217)

Among the Parivāradevatas of the Siva temples, eight of them constitute the Parivāra maṇḍala. An inscription dated in the 28th year of Parāntaka chola, (935 A.D.) refers to the establishment of ashtaparivāra temple in Thiruverumbur, which proves that in the 10th century, the main parivāras to the Siva temple were considered eight in number. The Āgamas do prescribe the same. In most of the Āgamas the following eight deities are prescribed as the Parivāra devatas.

- | | |
|---------------|-----------------|
| 1. Vṛshabha. | 5. Subrahmanya. |
| 2. Durga. | 6. Jyeshthā. |
| 3. Saptamātā. | 7. Vishnu, and |
| 4. Ganesa. | 8. Sūrya. |

Agastya, Brahma and Candesa are also included in place of others in some instances. A distribution list of the Parivāra deities in select āgamas is as follows :

	Rauravagama	Kāraṇa	Dīpta	Yogaja	Vīra.
East.	Vrsha	Vrsha	Vrsha	Vrsha	Vrsha.
S. East	Brahma	Agastya	Simhāvahini.	Durga	Durga.
South	Saptamātas	Kātyāyāni	Mātas	Mātas	Mātas.
S. West	Ganesa	Ganesa	Ganesa	Ganesa	Ganesa.
West	Kumāra	Kumāra	Kumāra	Kumāra	Kumāra.
N. West	Jyeshṭhā	Shanmukha	Jyeshṭhā	Jyeshṭhā	Jyeshṭhā.
North	Kushiki or Vishṇu	Vishṇu	Vishṇu	Vishṇu	Vishṇu.
N. East.	Sūrya	Sūrya	Sūrya	Candesa	Sūrya.

It may be seen from the list, that Durga appears as the Parivāra devata and is assigned the south eastern direction. In the Kailasanatha temple, Durga is seen in the South eastern direction. In the Rauravagama, Durga as Kausiki is assigned the northern direction, while the Kāraṇāgama assigns the Southern direction wherein she is called Kātyāyāni. In the southern direction of the Kailasanatha temple is shown Durga on the wall, in a rare representation. This probably may be taken as Mahishasuramardini. In most of the texts, the Saptamātas are assigned the southern direction. In the Kailasanātha temple, the Saptamātas are found in the southern direction. In the chola temples which have preserved the parivara shrines, Saptamātas are seen in the southern direction as at Perumpaluvur (Kilaiyur) and Melappaluvur. In other temples, though the original parivara shrines have disappeared the Saptamātas may be seen still, south of the garbhagrha.

Most of the texts examined, assign north-western direction to Jyeshṭhā. In the Kailasanatha temple though Jyeshṭhā is seen in the northern direction on the Vimāna and on the Mahāmaṇḍapa, occupying the north western direction, Jyeshṭhā appears in the parivāra group in the south.

Having discussed the distribution of Devi images in the Kailasanatha temple Kanchi, in relation to agamic texts and later temples, the individual deities in the Kailasanatha temple may now be considered in detail.

Durga

The greatest number of variety in which Durga is shown can be seen only in this temple. She is shown with 4, 8, 10 or 16 arms, and is shown seated either on a simhasana, or a lion; in some instances she is seen with her right leg planted on the ground and the left placed elegantly on the lion standing by. She is shown fighting vigorously being seated on a prancing lion in one. Yet in another is shown majestically seated on a lion. Characteristic of Pallava genius, the artist has been able to portray Durga in various forms, which shows the mythology relating to the manifestation of Durga was fully developed by the 8th century A.D.

Kātyāyāni

At the entrance to the main prākāra, on the southern side is this most delightful Devi seated on a lion with sixteen arms. The distribution of 16 arms of this seated figure on the lion, is so tasteful and at the same time done with such consummate skill, it is an essay in marshalling space and volume. Nothing disturbs the elegance, everything falling in their respective positions, heightening the grandeur of the Devi. The soft, broad and at the sametime strong back of the lion acts as the seat on which the Devi is seated in an absolutely relaxed pose, the left leg hanging down and the right bent and based on the other thigh. That she is a royal personage (Rājarājesvari) is suggested by the parasol above her head. The following are the emblems seen on the arms. The upper right arm is drawing an arrow from the quiver. The second is held in katakamudra, but gently playing with kandukas (balls). The third arm is holding a circular discuss with four spokes. The fourth arm holds the prayoga cakra. The fifth arm holds the long handled parasu pointing down. The sixth placed on the thigh holds a five hooded cobra coiling around. One arm is shown hanging and the main right arm is aiming an arrow. In the left arms are seen the following emblems; the upper left has sūla, and the others horn (?), sankha, vismaya, kataka, pāsa, and a long bow. The lower left is on the thigh. The bow held vertically and the casual manner the arrow is discharged is suggestive of the ability of the Devi to destroy the most powerful asuras with effortless ease. The lion mount of the Devi, turned to the front with its front paw raised is another remarkable portrayal. Traces of paintings are noticed on the sculpture.

Durga

In the south eastern corner of the big prākāra, the cloistered cell next to Ganapati, carry a fine example of Durga (Pl. 17). The Devi is standing with her right leg on the ground and the left placed on the lion. The image is 8 armed. The upper right arm is drawing the arrow. A sword is held in the second right; the third is placed on thigh while the fourth is in prayoga mudra, as it aims an arrow. The upper left is holding a long bow, planted on the ground. The second left holds a shield; the third is in suci, while the fourth is on the thigh; a parrot is seen on this arm. The prayoga cakra and conch are shown separately to the right and left respectively. Two umbrellas are shown above. The lion is also interesting.

Mahishasuradamani

To the west of the Brahma shrine in the bigger prākāra, between the cells 20 and 21, is shown another Devi as Mahishasura damani. The figure is heavily plastered but its general characters are preserved. She is seated on a pedestal, the right rested on the pedestal. The hanging left leg is placed on the head of a Mahisha, which itself is shown on a pedestal (Pl. 18). On either side of this head are two warrior devotees both of them in adoration. The goddess has eight arms, holding cakra, sula, kataka (on the abhaya form of the Pallava period) and sword in the right arms and bow, conch, parasu and snake in the left arms. The sword is held across in prayoga pose.

Central Durga

What may be called the central Durga (because Durga images are found in all the later temples in the same position) is found on the northern wall of the ardhamandapa (antarala ?) of the main prāsāda. Incidentally it is the biggest image of Durga in the temple. The Devi is ten armed, standing with the right leg on the ground and the left placed on the lion (Pl. 19). The upper right arm is drawing an arrow; the other right arms hold prayoga cakra, a sword, aiming an arrow, and the lower right placed on the thigh. In the left arms are bow, shield, snake, sūcihasta and ūruhasta. A big sūla is shown to her right and a parasu to the left. The edge of the sword is like a saw. Above the head of the Devi is a big parasol.

Yogesvari

To the west of the above Devi is this Goddess seated on a high pedestal. The right leg is rested on the pedestal while the left is placed on footrest. The Devi is four armed but carries no emblem in the upper arms (Pl. 19). The lower right arm is in vyākhyāna pose while the left is in dhyāna mudra. Evidently the yoga and Jñāna aspects usually associated with Devi. Lalita Tripurasundari is praised as Mahāyogesvari in Lalita Sahasranāma. She is also called Chinmayī. This is certainly a rare representation of Devi as the teacher of supreme yoga and knowledge. Thus this would provide the latest archaeological limit to which the concept of Devi as Yogesvari and Jñānadhātri could be assigned. On either side of the Devi are shown her mounts lion and deer.

Durga (in the Mahamandapa)

In the front mahāmandapa, Durga is shown in the north eastern direction. The Devi is standing with the right leg on the ground and the left placed on the lion. She is sixteen armed. The following poses or emblems are seen in arms; in the right arms, kataka, drawing the arrow, circular disc, prayoga cakra, long sword, snake, ūruhasta and aiming the arrow; in the left arms are vismaya, bow, bell, shield, parasu, parrot, sūci and touching the bow. Above the bell is shown a conch.

Tripura

As mentioned earlier, Tripurantaka, Tripurā and Tripurabhairavi are shown in the north western wall of the mahā prāsāda. As the Devi is shown in action along with Tripurantaka Siva, we identify her with Tripurā (Pl. 20). Devi in this aspect is shown riding a prancing lion. She is four armed. Bhairavi aspect is shown by the jaṭābhāra. It is interesting to note that inspite of being a terrific deity, Bhairavi is shown here in dhyāna mudra. It is well known that in Sakta cult, Bhairavi is adored as Yogesvari. Such a cult was well established before 8th century A.D. and was well known to the Tamil people is seen by this representation. It may not be out of place to mention that by the side of this Bhairavi is a standing Bhairava four armed holding īḍana hasta and suci hasta with a knife in the right arms. The upper left arm is in a peculiar mudra, the upper two fingers are extended (Pl. 21). In the lower arm there is a Kamandalu, the upper right arm is drawing the arrow and the lower right is wielding a sword. The upper left holds vismaya hasta and the lower left holds a bow.

Tripura Bhairavi

Bhairavi images are portrayed twice in this temple once as Tripura Bhairavi and secondly as Candi-Bhairavi. To the east of the above Tripurantaka and Tripura images (Pl. 20) is shown the seated image of Tripura Bhairavi. She is four armed holding a snake and a long trisula in the right arms. The upper left arm is in suci hasta and above that is shown a kapāla. The lower left is dhyāna pose. A parasu with a long handle is rested on her left shoulder. The Devi is seated on a pedestal and her hanging left leg is rested on a footrest.

Canda Bhairavi

Between the cloistered cell 22nd and 23rd, Bhairavi is shown as Candi in the southern side of the prakara wall. The Devi, seated is 8 armed. She holds a trisūla in prayoga form, in the upper right arm resting, the points on the ground. In the lower left arm are bell, snake and kataka mudra. In the left are vismaya mudra, parasu pointing down, an indistinct emblem, and the lower left in dhyāna pose. Above the right arms, is shown a kapāla. The Devi wears jaṣābhāra.

It is of interest to mention by the side of this Candi is positioned the saptamāta group. In later periods also Saptamātas appear along with Caṇḍi as in Triruvakkarai temple.

Saptamātas

Saptamātas occurs only once in the Kailasanatha group and that in the southern direction. They are found between the cells 21 and 22 (Pl. 22). Ganapati and Virabhadra are shown at the head facing west and the rest of the group i.e. all the matas are shown facing north, towards the main sanctum. Ganapati, a Valampuri image, is four armed. Virabhadra, wearing yogapatta is two armed, holding sword in the left arm and abhaya in the right. He is shown with jaṣābhāra. All the seven mothers are shown seated on a common seat. Except Indrāni, the rest of the mothers are four armed. Some of them have one of their arms in dhyāna pose, while the others are in various poses holding emblems. All of them are provided with a parasol, one each above their head. Brahmi holds akṣhamāla and kamandalu; Mahesvari sūla and pāsa; The emblems of Kaumari are not clear; Vaishnavi holds cakra and sankha which are shown separately above. The emblems of Vārāhi are not clear. Indrāni holds vājra in her left arm. Cāmunda wields dagger, sūla, kapāla and sūci. The sula has a very long shaft.

Jyeshṭhā

Jyeshṭhā occurs three times in the big temple, once on the southern wall of prakāra to the east of Brahma shrine, where she is shown pot bellied and with two arms. Secondly she is shown in the north wall of the ardhamandapa to the east of Durga (Pl. 23) where also she is shown seated on a pedestal, with two arms. No emblems are noticed in the arms. Behind her are shown the bovine headed son wielding a club and her daughter, one on either side.

The third and somewhat more elaborate figure occurs on the north western part of the Mahāmandapa. She is two armed and seated to her left is her daughter and to the right are two males but not the bovine headed figure; on either side are shown her standards, the crow flag and the broom-stick.

Lakshmi

Lakshmi occurs thrice in the temple once at the northern entrance, secondly at the southern side of the Mahāmandapa and thirdly at the South wall of the Antarala part of the Mahāprāsāda. In all the instances she is shown facing South. She is seated on a lotus seat, two armed holding lotuses in both the arms. Above her are elephants with vessels. The one on the northern entrance is particularly a beautiful image.

Sarasvati

Sarasvati is also shown thrice in the temple. Firstly on the southern side of the Mahāmandapa; secondly in the South wall of the ardhamandapa; in both these cases She is shown facing south. Thirdly she appears on the northern prākāra wall, to the west of Vishnu shrine. In this instance she is facing west. In Tanjore and Gangaikondacholapuram temples, Sarasvati is shown in the Mahāmandapa, facing west. Sarasvati in the Mahāmandapa is four armed, holding akshamāla and palm leaves in the right arm and kundika and dhyāna mudra in the left arms. Sarasvati in the northern prākāra is between cells 37 and 38. She is four armed holding akshamāla and abhaya in the right arms and kamandalu and flower in the left. Behind her are shown male attendants.

Tāndava Sakshini

One aspect of Devi, which deserves special attention is the Goddess witnessing the great dance of Siva, which is to assume the greatest significance in Saiva siddhanta Philosophy. On either side of the entrance to the garbhagṛha, is shown Siva performing ūrdhva tāndava. The sculpture on the southern side is the most well preserved. As this group is without plaster, is representative of the quality and elegance the art of Rājasimha reached. Ūrdhva Tāndava Siva is adored by Brahma and Vishnu to either side. To the left of Siva, on the side wall is figured the finest sculpture of Devi, leaning on a pedestal, watching gracefully the Mahātāndava. What a great figure it is! Words are inadequate to describe the grace and elegance of this master piece of Pallava art. The universal mother stands with her eyes glancing the master dancer. The Lalita Sahasranāma, describes the Goddess as Mahesvara Mahākālpa Mahātāndava sākshini. That this was a popular form in much earlier period is seen from the hymns of Appar (early 7th century) when he gives a graphic description of this dance witnessed by the Devi.

... ..Māner nokkin Arumāna vān muhattā!
amarntur kāṇa amarar ganam mudivananga āḍuhinra Perumāl.

We have seen earlier that in the Thirupparankunram temple, the dance of Siva portrayed in the excavated cave, assignable to late 8th century and in this panel Parvati is also shown as a witness. In the Ananda Tandava form, so popular in chola period, Devi always witnesses the dance as Sivakāmi.

Ambika

In the cloister cells of the Kailasanatha temple of Kanchi, Ambika is shown in the south-east, the fourth from the east. Just as Ganesa, Durga, and Subrahmanya are given separate shrines, so also she occupies a separate shrine in the lay out. Devi is seated with two arms, resting her left on the pedestal and holding the right in sūci mudra. At her back stand two female attendants probably Manjula and Menaka holding chouri. To her right is a bearded yogi and to her left is shown a kneeling male figure adoring the Goddess. There is also a female attendant standing by. We have seen earlier that the Devi is constantly adored by Devas, Rishis, and siddhānganas. The Syāmala dandaka, praises the Devi in the following words—O Devi you manifest in the minds of yogins. Yoginām mānase dhyātase. You are adored by women like Manjula and Menaka. Manjulā Menakādī Anganā Mānite. You are adored by Yakshas, Gandharvas, and Siddha women. Yaksha gandharva siddhāngana maṇḍalairarchite. The representation of various figures in association with Ambika in the above sculpture should be viewed in this perspective.

Another point of interest that deserve special mention is a separate shrine to Ambika in the Siva temple complex. We will discuss the significance of this shrine when we take up the study of Kamakottam in the sequence.

We will point out that in the Kailasanatha temple of Kanchi, Devi is shown in so many manifestation, that it has no parallel in Indian art and that it also points to the highly developed concepts of Devi cult in early 8th century A.D. Her manifestation as Srimāta, Ambikā, Umā, Kanyā, Kadambavanavāsini, Mātangi, Sumerugiri madhyastā, Durga, Kātyāyāni, Tripurā, Tripurabhairavi, Ādibhairavi, Yogesvari, Jyeshṭhā, Lakshmi, Sarasvati and Mahātāndava Sākshini are the forms represented here.

SAKTI CULT IN LATER PALLAVA PERIOD

We have discussed the representation of Durga, Caṇḍī Jyeshṭhā and Saptamātas in the reign of Rājasimha, with special reference to Kanchi and Mamallapuram. A few select Pallava foundations subsequent to this period will provide us an idea of their worship and cult. We are not exhausting the list, but study only representative sites. The sites selected for this study are Uttaramerur, Thiruttani, Alambakkam and a few others.

Uttaramerur

Uttaramerur village is a Pallava foundation of the time of Nandivarman Pallavamalla and its date is circa 750 A.D. The village seems to have been laid out according to the Vaikhanasa tradition probably the Mārci samhita. The village holds a unique position in the history of Tamilnad. The pattern of the distribution of temples and other structures, conform to religious texts and are still in their original positions. There is a sabha mandapa, village assembly hall in the centre of the village. The Vishnu temple is in the west; a Durga temple in the north, a Siva temple and a Saptamāta temple in the north east and a Jyeshtha, in the south. These are not only in these positions today but are referred to as existing in their respective position in the inscriptions.

Sarasvati

The Vishnu temple now called Sundaravarada temple has many interesting features. In the southern side of the main sanctum the sopāna bhitta. (parapet of the steps) carry a unique image of Sarasvati. The Devi is seated on a lotus pedestal with four arms, the upper arms carrying akshamāla and kamandala, the lower right is in abhaya pose and the left placed on the thigh. On either side of the Devi below are two devotees adoring the Goddess. The adorer to the right holds lotus flowers and the left is in anjali pose. But what is significant is the two elephants shown above the Devi one pouring water over the head of the Goddess and the other holding the pot (Pl. 24). The representation resembling Gajalakshmi panel is only one of its kind in the south. A bronze said to come from Kashmir region, now in the British Museum, shows Durga seated with her lion below the seat, with two elephants above, pouring water. It is evident that all the three images of Durga, Lakshmi and Sarasvati were shown with water pouring elephants, the Lakshmi shown invariably and the other two occasionally. This would suggest that the representation of the three Goddesses had a common origin and the three had something to do with the mother goddess (earth). The identification Mahalakshmi, Mahasarasvati and Mahadevi with the Parādevatā, in the Devī Māhātmya is also reflected in this representation. Mahākālī, Mahalakshmi, Mahasarasvatī rūpini Durgāyai namaḥ, says the Devī Māhātmya. We have mentioned that Sarasvati occurring in Sundaravarada temple at Uttaramerur conforms to Vaikhānasa texts. The Marici saṃhita says dakṣiṇe sopānasthala bhittau Dakṣhinamukhim Vākdevim ca kārayet.

Durga

In the village of Uttaramerur, is a Durga temple to the north west of the village. The base of the shrine carries a fragmentary inscription, that could be assigned on paleographical grounds to 12th century. The superstructure has been renovated in brick and mortar. But the image of Durga in low relief is a Pallava sculpture of 8th century A.D. The Devi is 8 armed holding usual emblems, with a parrot on her left arm. The buffalo head is shown below the feet. On either side are devotees seated adoring the Devi. A little above is shown a tiny deer. The sculpture is however crudely and disproportionably finished, in folk style. It is interesting to find such Durga images being called Vadavāyil Chelvi i.e. the Goddess of Northern quarters, in inscriptions.

Saptamātas

In the north eastern corner of the village is located the Saptamāta temple; the base of the temple carries inscriptions of Parthivendravarman and Parantaka chola and must therefore be anterior to 10th century A.D. The temple is rectangular in plan. Inside are Saptamātas, two sculptures, of Mādari Amman and a Daṇḍu Māri. Of the two Mādari Amman figures one is a later copy with 8 arms but the earlier one assignable to Pallava period holds damaru, sword, parasu, sūla, shield and sarpa in her arms. The Saptamātas and the accompanying Ganesa and Dakshinamurti also belong to 8th century. Inscriptions in the temple record gifts of perpetual lamps, provisions for food offerings, worship etc. for the Saptamātākkal also called Piḍārimars, from the time of Parantaka chola (10th cent.) The significance of the inscriptions will be discussed in the next chapter.

Jyeshṭhā

In the south western part of the village a sculpture of Jyeshṭhā is lying. The local people fear this sculpture very much and keep it lying upside down. The placement of the sculpture corresponds to prescription in certain texts. Two inscriptions of 10th century also point to the present location of sculpture as a temple of Jyeshṭhā (Uttaramerur). The sculpture is in the usual pose with the two attendants. The crow standard and the broom stick standard are also shown.

It is interesting to note that in a village laid out according to Vaishnava texts and in which Vaishnava followers predominated from 8th to 12th century A.D., these Devi temples were installed and continued to be worshipped with great veneration.

Alambakkam

Alambakkam about 30 miles from Thiruchi, was a Pallava foundation in the reign of Dantivarman, 9th century A.D. One of the powerful chieftains under Danti came from this village. In the village is a Vishnu temple, a Siva temple and Saptamāta temple. The Vishnu temple is of the reign of Dantivarman but the superstructure has been reconstructed in later period. In the niches of the ardhamandapa, Lakshmi and Sarasvati are shown standing, which is an interesting feature of this temple. The Siva temple seems to be a century later than the Vishnu temple. But the Saptamāta temple to the north east of the village is a Pallava foundation. According to an inscription it was built in the reign of Dantivarman (ARE. 705/1909). However only the base of the shrine is original while the superstructure and the sculptures inside are later ones. It seems from the Vishnu temple which is a big structure, Alambakkam was also a predominantly Vaishnavite settlement and the installation of Saptamātas in the Vaishnavite centre was continued in the 9th century as well, is revealed from this village. A certain Vijayanallulan, a chieftain under Dantivarman hailed from this village of Alambakkam. He was a great builder. At Thiruvellarai near Thiruchi, he dug a big well in the form of Svastika which has survived to this day. On the lintel stones sculptures are carved on all the sides. On one of them we find a Saptamāta group.

During the third quarter of the 9th century two great temples were built in the reign of Aparājita Pallava, one at Takkolam and the other at Thiruttani.

Takkolam

The Jalanātasvāmi temple at Takkolam was wrongly ascribed to the Banas but I have found an inscription of Aparajita on the base of the main shrine and assigned to the reign of Aparajita. The village received the benefaction from Aparajita after whose name it was renamed Aparajita Chaturvedimangalam. The Siva temple contains one of the most delightful sculpture of Durga in its northern devakoshta (Pl. 25). The Devi stands on a Mahisha's head with four arms holding cakra and sankha in the upper arms and abhaya and katihasta in the lower arms. We may say that this almost presupposes the conventional representation of Durga in later temples. Another point of interest in this temple is the portrayal of Somaskanda image at the lintel of the entrance.

Thiruttani

The Virattanesvara temple at Thiruttani about 60 miles from Madras was built by one Nambi Appi in the 18th regnal year of Aparajita. This is considered the last of the great Pallava temple and has been discussed in detail by Jouveau Dubrawil in his Pallava antiquities (London 1916). There are three points that are of interest to us in our study. The conventional representation of Brahma, Vishnu, Dakshinamurti, Ganesa and Durga in the devakoshtas as found in Takkolam temple are repeated here and seem to take firm root. Durga in the northern devakoshta (Pl. IV Pallava Antiquities) is four armed holding cakra, sankha, abhaya and katihasta. She is shown without the Mahisha's head, but standing in sambhanga pose. In the upper part of the griva (facade) is shown Umamahesvara seated on a pedestal. Siva is four armed holding parasu and mrga and abhaya and kati. Umā seated to his left is in two arms holding a lotus in the right and resting the other on the pedestal.

More significant than these, is the group of Saptamātas preserved in the mandapa. The Saptamāta group is complete and are excellent illustrations of Aparajita art. All the mātas are four armed and on a pedestal. The following are the emblems in their arms and their mounts shown in their seats.

Brahmi : Akshamāla, kamandalu, abhaya and kati-swan (Pl. 26).

Mahesvari : Parasu, mrga, abhaya and kati-bull (Pl. 27).

Kaumari : Akshamāla, kundika, abhaya and kati-peacock (Pl. 28).

Vaishnavi : Cakra, sankha, abhaya and kati-Garuda (Pl. 29).

Varahi : Cakra, sankha, abhaya and kati-lion (Pl. 30).

Indrani : Vajra, pasa, abhaya and kati-elephant (Pl. 31).

Camunda : Sūla, damaruka, abhaya and kapāla-pisaca (Pl. 32).

Before we leave the Pallava period it is necessary to detail some sculptures of Sakti, which are to be assigned to this period on grounds of style.

Durga

Two Durga sculptures to be assigned to the 8th century A.D. illustrated in this study come from Vishnu temples. Pl. 33 is in the Vishnu temple of Mangadu, near Madras. In this Vishnu temple the structures seems to have undergone reconstruction but the main image of Vishnu, a seated figure with Sri devi and Bhudevi by the side is a fine Pallava product of the 8th century. So also the Garuda figure placed facing the main shrine. But in the compound are seen a few Pallava sculptures two of them representing Lokapalas, one representing Siva and another a Durga. A lion base of a pillar is also seen outside. It is not known whether this Durga belonged originally to the Vishnu temple or a Siva temple. If it originally belonged to a Vishnu temple—which is not improbable—it is a good example. It is 4 feet in height, holding cakra, sankha, abhaya and katihasta. The village has also yielded a good sculpture of Jyeshtha, to be assigned to 8th century A.D. The Durga coming from the Ranganatha temple, Thiruvaramam (Pl. 34) South Arcot District, is 8 armed holding the usual emblems; special characteristics are a parrot shown on the right arm and another right arm placed over the head of the devotee, seated by the side holding a dagger in his right and adoring with the left. Another devotee is shown kneeling with Anjali pose. It is possible that this was worshipped originally as an independent deity and later on has found its way to this temple.

Durga, (Pl. 35) is shown standing on a lotus pedestal, with the deer standing at the back. The Devi is four armed wielding cakra, sankha, abhaya and katihasta. It is also a fine example of 9th century Pallava art. A crude but low bas-relief Durga (Pl. 36) standing on the head of a Mahisha with eight arms, wielding usual emblems, is in Perangiyur, near Viluppuram. By the side of it is a beastly looking feminine figure, seated, holding the female organ with her left arm and probably a flower in the right. It is probably a yogini (Pl. 37) attendant on Durga. These two folkish, crude sculptures assignable to 8-9th century A.D., show that the Durga images were made and consecrated not only by royal patrons, but also by common people who could only command the village artists for the execution of the figures.

Two standing figures, both with four arms, with their usual emblems, both to be assigned 8th century A.D. are illustrated as Pls. 38 and 39. One comes from Vallam in Chingleput district and the other is in Periyamarai in Trichi district. An eight armed Durga holding her usual emblems, now preserved in the Madras Museum (Pl. 40), shows the deer standing behind. This has the head of the Mahisha below the feet.

An interesting inscribed Durga stone sculpture is in Tirthamalai, Dharmapuri district (Pl. 41). The Devi standing on the head of Mahisha is eight armed holding, sankha, cakra, sword, shield, arrow, bow, katihasta and probably a parrot. On her back are tunas. An inscription to her right in Vatteluttu characters of 8th century reads Bhagavati Kuruccūli Koḍuḍai...the last few letters are illegible. It means the Goddess Suli of the mountain. This is perhaps the earliest inscribed Durga, of the Tamil country whose name is given in the epigraph. A similar Durga but belonging to 11th century A.D. (Pl. 42), also carries an inscription which unfortunately is fragmentary. The inscription begins with the name of the chola ruler Rajendra chola I. These two illustrate the fact that inscribed Durga images were also installed from 8th century and were under worship.

SAKTI CULT IN EARLY PANDYA PERIOD (600-900 A.D.)

The Imperial Pāṇḍyas, ruling the southern part of the Tamil country with Madurai as their capital came into power almost at the sametime as the Pallavas in the north. Like the Pallavas, the Pāṇḍyas were also great patrons of art and literature. A great number of cave temples in the southern country owes their existence to their patronage. Unfortunately no structural temple that could be attributed to the early Pāṇḍyas has come to light so far. An assessment of the Pāṇḍyan contribution to Tamil art is yet to be undertaken. A few cave temples bearing excellent sculptures have unfortunately been plastered and it is difficult to assess their artistic achievement. In spite of these handicaps a few works do remain to tell us their contribution.

Earliest Cave

The earliest Pāṇḍyan rock-cut cave, is at Pillaiyarpatti near Karaikkudi. The inscription inside the excavated cave, to be assigned to 6th century on paleographical grounds gives the name of the architect. The cave itself is dedicated to Siva with an excavated sanctum. The Sivalinga in the sanctum is rock-cut and there are three sculptures, representing Ganesa, Harihara and Lingodbhava. There is no sculpture of Devi in this early rock-cut cave.

Kunrakkudi

There are three rock-cut caves at Kunrakkudi, near Pillaiyarpatti. All the three caves are dedicated to Siva and are to be assigned to 8th century A.D. on grounds of paleography of the inscriptions found in one of them. Among the three caves, the first is an elaborate one with a number of sculptures representing dancing Siva, Harihara, Vishnu, Subrahmanya, Ganesa and Durga. The Durga image is shown standing on the head of Mahisha with eight arms. In the right arms She holds cakra, sword, bell and abhaya and in the left holds sankha, shield, bow, and fire (Pl. 43). A peculiarity is that she holds the fire near her chest. On either side of her feet are shown warriors one on either side, the person to the right, cutting his dead as offering and to the left seated in adoration. Since the sculpture has been plastered we are not in a position to assess its artistic quality.

Thirugokarnam

The cave temple at Thirugokarnam in Pudukkottai, is assigned to the Pāṇḍyas on grounds of style. It is an excavated cave temple, dedicated to Siva. A point of interest to our study is the presense of Saptamātas caved on the rock by the side of the rock-cut cave. These are excellent sculptures of the 8th century A.D.

Kalugumalai

In Kalugumalai, in Thirunelveli district, is what may be considered the excellent group of Pāṇḍya rock-cut monuments. A rock-cut cave, a monolithic temple and sculptures carved in bas reliefs are found there. The rock-cut cave temple now houses the image of Subrahmanya which is under worship. Over sixty sculptures representing Jain Thirthankaras and Yakshis are carved on the rock face, each with an inscription, recording their dedication. The third monument is the monolith now called Vettuvankoil. Like the Kailasa temple of Ellora, a block has been separated from the parent rock and the monolith carved. The work has been abandoned in the middle due to unknown causes. The sculptures are of outstanding quality but that is of interest to our study is the portrayal of the universal parents Siva and Pārvati in the facade of the vimāna. The concept of portraying Umāmahesvara on the vimāna was continued in later times as well.

Rajakkalmangalam

A number of sculptures representing various Gods and Goddesses have been brought to light from a village Rajakkalmangalam near Nanguneri in Tinnelveli district. These are excellent sculptures of the 8th century A.D. and are illustrative of the Pāṇḍyan art. More than twenty images of Devi have come to light from this site. We do not know to whom this temple was dedicated. In all probability it was dedicated to Vishnu as Narasimha. The presense of such a large number of Devi figures is striking. We are not able to identify them with any amount of certainty except to say that they represent both Vaishnavite and Saivite images.

Minakshi Temple

In the famous Minakshi temple of Madurai, one group of Saptamātas, assignable to 8th century A.D. are under worship. Originally they were said to have been outside the temple and were brought to the temple within the living memory. Probably they were the Saptamātas of the lay out of the city. The group is not complete, the Kaumari is missing and in its place a Sarasvati image has been added but they do represent classical tradition of the Pāṇḍyas.

Thirupparankunram

Before we close the account of the Pāṇḍyas of the 6-9th century A.D., we will discuss one important cave temple from Thirupparankunram. The main temple of Thirupparankunram, now added as Subrahmanya is an excavated cave temple. The Thirupparankunram was known from Sangam period, as the abode of Subrahmanya. The temple of Subrahmanya in the hill of Parankunram is adored in glowing terms in Paripadel and other sangam poems. But where the original shrine was located we have no knowledge. The present temple was originally excavated for five deities, Siva, Vishnu, Durga, Subrahmanya and Ganesa. But the presiding deity of the temple seems to have been Siva till the end of 15th century. An Amman shrine erected for it calls it Kamakkottamudaiya Nachiyar temple, evidently the name of Pārvati, the consort of Siva. This proves that this was a Siva temple. But Thirumalai Nayak made extensive additions with his portrait just in line with the Subrahmanya shrine. The tradition from the sangam age and the royal patronage to the deity, has made the present temple, predominantly a Subrahmanya shrine.

The cave temple was renovated by one Sāttan Ganapathi alias, Pāṇḍiamirta mangalavaraiyan in the sixth regnal year of Pāṇḍya Maranjadaiya who is identical with Parāntaka Nedunjadaiyan whose accession is placed in 762 A.D. Obviously the temple has been in existence before him. We do not know who excavated the cave. However the present shape of the cave temple is mainly due to Sāttan Ganapathi. The cave temple, interesting in many ways, has five sanctums dedicated to Siva, Vishnu, Durga, Subrahmanya and Ganesa. The sanctum of Siva is at the southern side. In the centre of it is a rock-cut Sivalinga and at the back wall is an image of Somaskanda. Opposite to this sanctum is the sanctum of Vishnu who has Bhudevi on one side and a sage probably Mrgandu on the other side. On the back wall of the cave are Durga in the centre with Subrahmanya and Ganesa flanking her. It resembles very much the Trichy lower rock-cut cave where Vishnu, Ganesa, Subrahmanya, Brahma, Durga and Siva are portrayed. The special features of the temple are Surya is not included in the group. While at Trichy the sculptures at the back wall are only panels, here they have sanctums scooped at the back wall. Further the wall adjoining the Siva sanctum has a fine group of sculpture representing Siva dancing the Chatura Tāṇḍava in the centre. To his right is Pārvaṭi standing by the side of a Bull, calmly watching the dance of her master. Above are shown Brahma, Vishnu, and Indra Gods adoring the King of dance. Below them are Ganas playing flute and one of Siva's attendants playing a Drum. To the left of Siva was also a panel which has been covered by later structures but in the visible portion may be seen, Camunda or Kālī, dancing. We will discuss this panel under Dancing Siva and Kālī. The wall adjoining the Vishnu cave carries three images of Vishnu as Ādinātha, Narasimha and Varāha.

Rajarajesvari Durga

A little further down, on the southern side is a fine group of sculpture. In the centre is an excellent image of Devi seated on an elaborate simhasana with four arms holding pāsa, ankusa, abhaya and an indistinct emblem. On either side of Devi are shown Surya and Candra above and in the middle rishis one on either side and below are female chouri bearers one on either side. In front of her below are shown four sages. To the right of the Devi on the side wall are celestials and in front of all is shown a royal portrait standing. The shield he holds bears fish emblem and this may probably indicate that the figure is a Pāṇḍya. To the left of the Devi are also celestials and in front of all of them is Mahisha standing in adoration. This group is unique in the history of Indian art. The whole group presents a royal court in which the Devi is seated majestically as king of Kings adored by Devas, rishis, and others. Rightly She is now called Rājarājesvari. A late Tamil work on Thirupparankunram has a dedicatory verse to Ādi Bhuvanesvari. It is not known whether the reference is to this image but the description seems to fit in well with the sculpture.

It is of interest to mention that the inscription recording the renovation to main cave by Sāttan Ganapathi in the reign of Parāntaka Nedunjadaiyan also states that Nakkan Korri, wife of Sāttan Ganapathi, caused the temple Durga and Jyeshṭhā to be made.

Jyeshthā

In the same temple, correspondingly on the other side is a rock-cut sculpture of Jyeshthā. The Devi is seated on a pedestal with two arms holding a lotus in her right arm and placing her left on the lap of her daughter sitting to her left. Her daughter is also shown as big as Jyeshthā seated on the pedestal. To the right of Jyeshthā is her bovine headed son also seated on the same pedestal. Jyeshthā is shown as an elderly lady but without the pot belly and plumpy appearance. Though it is not an elegant sculpture it is representative of 8th century Pāṇḍya art. The presence of Jyeshthā here would indicate, what is now worshipped as Rajarajesvari on the corresponding south, is really Durga, caused to be made by Nakkan Korri in the year 768 A.D. It shows that the concept of Devi as the primordial deity seated on a royal throne, receiving worship at the hands of all and that this concept was wellknown in the heart of the Pāṇḍya region in 8th century A.D. It is also of interest to note that these two Devi shrines, one of Durga and another of Jyeshthā were made and consecrated by a lady.

The Sakti cult in later Pāṇḍya period is only an extension of the cult as prevalent in the imperial chola days. It must be remembered that the Pāṇḍya region was virtually under the direct rule of the cholas and their cultural impact is so great of that it virtually took a universal character. We will discuss it after dealing with the chola period.

SAKTI CULT UNDER THE CHOLAS

The Cholas appear on the scene about the middle of the 9th century A.D. The imperial chola line virtually begins with Vijayālāya, who is said to have defeated the Muttaraiyar. His ascendancy was signalled by the capture of Tanjore, which is mentioned in both copper plates and lithic records. Literature of the chola period speak of him as a great warrior who received over 96 heroic wounds on his body. The first act of Vijayālāya, on his conquest of Tanjore was the installation of the image of Nisumbhasūdanī at Tanjore. The Thiruvālangādu copper plates of Rajendra chola I, states that Vijayālāya having conquered the city of Tanjāpuri installed the image of Nisumbhasūdanī, whose lotus feet were adored by the celestials and ruled his country by her grace. The Nisumbhasūdanī image installed by Vijayālāya has since been traced in Tanjore. It is now worshipped as Vadabhadrakali near the eastern gate (Pl. 45).

Description

The description of the Devi would indicate that it is one of the unique sculpture in the whole of India, exhibiting the tremendous power with which the Devi shook off the mighty asuras and emerged victorious. It is also illustrative of the grim determination with which, Vijayālāya chola was able to throw off the yoke of the Pallava power of the north and the menacing power of the Pāṇḍyas of the south. Soon he was to create a power which brought the entire southern India under its firm grip and extended the power even far beyond the seas in the east and penetrated upto the Gangetic plains in the north.

This achievement of Vijayālaya was due to the grace of this Goddess. The reason why Vijayālaya chose this Goddess as his patron deity is clear. In Devi Māhātmya it is said that the King who desires conquest in war should propitiate this Goddess. Vijayālaya's expectations were fulfilled. We may say the great period of Kālī worship begins with the installation of Nisumbhasūdanī at Tanjore. Being the patron deity of the Imperial chola ruler, it has influenced the feudatories of the choles to install Kālī images of sufficient magnitude in their village foundations.

Āditya chola, the son and successor of Vijayālaya was a great devotee of Siva. He is said to have studded the banks of river Kaveri with stone temples of Siva. A good number of his foundations have been identified now. The Paluvettaraiyar chieftains who were the powerful feudatories under them, were ruling with Paluvur as their capital. In the reign of Āditya two magnificent temples have been built by one of the Paluvettaraiyar in the village called Perumpaluyur. At the southern end of the village is a temple dedicated to Kālī (Pl. 46). The Devi seated on a pedestal with eight arms, wielding usual emblems, is powerful expression in stone. The asura is shown lying dead at the feet of the Goddess with her head thrown back and the hairs standing erect like flames, the rounded ball like eyes and the upper arm, in the pose of wielding the trident about to pierce the heart of the asura, are indicating the wrath of the Goddess. It is an excellent illustration of the Kālī of the Āditya's period beginning of 10th century A.D.

In between these two excellent Kālī sculptures must be placed another masterpiece of Kālī, now under worship in Thiruvakkarai (Pl. 47). This Devi is also eight armed; her right arms hold a trident, cakra, a long bladed sword, and a dagger. The left arms carry Vismaya mudra, a big shield, a kapāla and sūcimudra. The hairs move around. The Devi is shown as giving a howling sound. The right leg is placed on the seat and the left is placed on the ground. No figure is shown on the pedestal. There is a munda yagnopavīta. In her right ears the Devi wears a sisu as ear ornament and in the left a big patrakundala. Unlike the Tanjore Nisumbhasūdanī, which is shown as a skeleton, and the Perumpalur Kālī which exhibits strength, the Thiruvakkarai image has supple limbs, and lose flash characterising her softness. The hairs do not move up and stand erect, which becomes a fashion from the reign of Āditya. It moves gently to the side like the Tanjore image. Both the ear ornaments also show close resemblance to the Tanjore image. The sculpture is to be assigned to the reign period Vijayālaya chola. This also illustrates the popularity of the cult in the reign of Vijayālaya.

The bronzes of the age of Vijayālaya are rare. But there are two that can certainly be said to belong to his reign. One from Ambalavanesvaram temple Uraniambalam, is eight armed seated on pedestal. The right arms holds sūla, sword, snake and buffalo's horn. The left arms are in vismaya, shield, bell and kapāla. Below her left foot is a dead figure with sword and shield. The hairs do not stand erect but fan to the side like the Tanjore and Thiruvakkarai images. There is no Yagnopavīta at all for this image. The modelling, pose etc. of this bronze very closely resemble the Thiruvakkarai image.

The Kālī from Arunacalesvara temple Kilaiyūr is seated rather in a stiff pose. She is four armed holding sūla in her upper right arm. No emblem is seen in the upper left. The lower right is in abhaya and the lower left in dhūyavarada pose. There is a mundayagnopavita. The left leg is rested on the pedestal and the right is hanging down. The face is full of charm. It is also to be assigned to the reign period of Vijayālaya. Kilaiyūr has yielded besides this Kālī a superb Somaskanda and Tripurāntaka now preserved in the Tanjore Art Gallery, all to be assigned to 9th century A.D.

There are two bronzes to be assigned to the reign of Āditya. An image comes from the Ramanathaswami temple, Ramesvaram. It is a fine image of Kālī, four armed seated, holding damaruka, sūla, nāga and kapāla in the four arms. There is a fine yagnopavita of small beads (skull?). The pedestal, however seems to be a late one. A bronze to be assigned to the end of Āditya's reign coming from a different tradition is which is now in the Pannakaparamesvara temple Pannateru, Tanjore district. It is eight armed holding sūla, sword, pasa and snake in the right arms and damaruka, shield, bell and kapāla in the left arms. The hairs are standing erect as the Perumpaluvur Kālī. Below her left foot is the lying figure holding sword and shield. A point of interest is the presense of three heads on the pedestal. It is found on all the sides of the pedestal. There is a mundayagnopavita. Though the figure is somewhat stiff it is a good illustration of Āditya's period. We have examined these bronzes to show that in addition to stone images excellent images of Kālī were made in bronze in the early chola period.

It is of interest to mention that in the Pallava period, Durga dominates. She is given a separate shrine in villages and towns. Besides we also get Saptamāta temples in the village lay out. But with the advent of Vijayālaya, big images of Kālī were enshrined in the village lay out. Though Durga images were also consecrated, it is Kālī who dominates as illustrated by the Perumpaluvur image. But such Kālī images were consecrated mainly outside the temple complex. Within the Siva temples however Durga, Saptamāta and also Jyeshṭha are found.

Durga is found in 95% of the temples occupying the northern niche of the ardhamandapa. She is generally four armed holding cakra, sankha in the upper arms and abhaya and katihasta in the lower arms. Six or eight armed Durgas are also found. The weapons in her arms are almost the same in all cases cakra and sankha, sword and shield, bow and arrow, abhaya and kaṭi. In the early period, particularly upto the end of 10th century two heroes, one cutting his head and the other seated and adoring the Devi are represented in some illustrations. But this representation is given up later. It is not easy say why it was given up. In the literature of the period like the Kalingattupparani and Takkayāgapparani we get references to head offerings. The only reason for dropping the representation of head offering is the tendency to formalise everything. Only the main image of God or Goddess came to be represented, shedding the other details.

We will discuss a few Durga images of the Chola period which we have included in this study on account of their artistic and iconographic interest. One of the earliest image is the Durga now in worship in the Kandiur temple (Pl. 49). It is an excellent figure of the age of Vijayālaya. The Devi is standing, four armed holding cakra and sankha in the upper arms. The lower right arm is in varada pose, an unusual representation. The left is in kaṭihasta. No Mahisha's head is shown below the feet. The broad breast-band and heavy undergarment are characteristic of the age. It is one of the finest specimen of Durga in Tanjore region. Douglas Barret in his 'early chola architecture', rightly points out that there is perhaps no example of early chola sculpture of greater scale and authority but assigns it to the second phase (940-970), but seems to be early 885 A.D.

Almost to the same period must be assigned Pl. 50 coming from Tyagarāja temple Thiruvavarur. The Devi is eight armed, standing in an attractive tribhanga pose on the Mahisha's head. The right arms carry cakra, sword, abhaya and varada; the left arms hold sankha, bow, shield and kaṭihasta. To the left of the Devi is a sūla planted with a long handle. A point of interest is the presense of parrot on a stand to her right, like a standard. The Devi wears a broad breast-band and channavira. The sculpture is also a fine example of the age of Vijayālaya. In contrast to this is another image of Durga, preserved in the same temple (Pl. 51). It was made almost one hundred years later, in the 2nd regnal year of Rājārāja (987 A.D.) Perhaps the best representation of Durga of the first quarter of the 10th century A.D. are to be seen at the Nagesvara temple Kumbakonam and the Brahmapurisvara temple at Pullamangai. The Pullamangai image reflects almost metallic quality. Two excellent specimens of the middle 10th century A.D., come from Thiruvaduturai and Punjai (Pl. 52). Both are masterpieces, each unique in its own way, in its form and expressive quality. In Punjai, we have the mounts lion and deer shown above, which is a survival of early features. The Durga image, which we recovered from Debris is a good example of the third quarter of 10th century. The temple was built in the reign of Uttamachola from (970-985 A.D.). All the sculptures discussed above are in the Devakoshtas of the vimānas, except the Pl. 49 from Kandiur, which probably adorned a bigger temple which has since disappeared. An illustration of the age of Rājārāja is also included in this study. This however belongs to a temple erected in the early years of Rājārāja's reign and hence bears the characters of the earlier phase. In the great temple of Tanjore, the image is found in the northern niche of the Mahāmandapa. The same position is occupied in the Gangaikondacholapuram as well. A fine sculpture of Durga which occupied the niche of the Darasuram temple is missing. The image now in Palaiyarai temple is probably the same, where it is placed inside the mahāmandapa. The imperial temples built by the Chola emperors, bear Durga in the Mahāmandapa.

At this stage it is also necessary to state that Lakshmi and Sarasvati are shown in the south and north of the Mahāmandapa, facing west. We have seen that Durga, Lakshmi, Sarasvati and Jyeshthā are placed in the Mahāmandapa of the Kailasanatha temple of Kanchi, built in the beginning of 8th century A.D. The association of Devi images in the Mahāmandapa is continued to the middle of 11th century after which the practice seems to have been given up. Practically the mahāmandapas that came up later, bear no sculpture at all.

The chola period beginning from 1100 A.D., witnessed a new movement in temple building activity. It manifested itself in the form of monumental Gopuras. The temple which have assumed greater proportions like the Chidambaram temple were enlarged on great scale. Elaborately planned gopuras came to be built and in them a number of Sakti images were installed. In the entrance were always placed Durga on one side and Bhairava on the other.

Chidambaram Gopuras

The best illustrations of the Gopuras of the chola period are at Chidambaram. All the four were built within one hundred and fifty years circa 1100 A.D. All the four Gopuras of the Chidambaram temple carry images of Durga. These are generally four armed standing erect holding sankha cakra, abhaya and katihasta. Durga is the protector of the Durgams (forts) and it is in this sense probably she is positioned at the entrance of the fortification (enclosure).

Besides the entrance, various aspects of Devi are portrayed at the niches of the Chidambaram Gopuras. One of the most striking representations in all the Chidambaram gopuras is the Tripurasundari images striding on the back of Mahishāsura. The portrayal is unique and what is interesting is the label inscription on one of them, giving the name of the Devi as Tripurasundari (Pl. 54). The Devi is shown with 18 arms (ashtādasabhuja). The Devi is in an attacking pose bearing multiple arms. With her right leg she is pressing the back of the Mahishāsura. The left leg is pressing the leg of the asura. Caught underneath the legs of the Devi, the asura is crying out; his head turned to the right shows the pathetic fall. The Devi's lion is shown at the back. In the portrayal of Durga Mahishāsuramardini, this is a great and bold conception, we meet with after the period of the Pallavas. What is more significant is that the Durga Mahishamardini was worshipped as Tripurasundari in 12th century. The label inscription helps us in determining the aspect. In addition to Tripurasundari, Durga is also portrayed with an inscription as Durga devi.

Another interesting portrayal in the gopuras of Chidambaram is Bhadrakālī, which is seen in the west, south and north gopuras. The figure in the western gopura (Pl. 55) has a label inscription reading Bhadrakālī. James Harle gives a good account of the three images of Chidambaram gopuras. The Devi is eight armed in all the three instances, but the emblems held in the arms are preserved in the images of the northern gopura only. The emblems are sūla, nāgapāsa, sword and damaru in the right arms and agni, shield, vajra and kapāla in the left arms. Kālī here appears as Sumbha Nisumbhasūdanī in which form she was popular in the chola period. It is different from the Mahishāsuramardini aspect.

The sculpture in the western gopura is particularly an excellent sculpture of Kālī of the later chola period. The Kālī is shown with ūrdhvakesa. A number of snakes are seen on her hair. Sisukundala in the right and patrakundala with an owl in the left are shown as in early sculptures. The asura is shown lying below the feet of the Devi in the same way as in the Tripurasundari image. A gana is at the back. Two female attendants are shown flanking the niche.

Besides the representation of Durga, Tripurasundari, and Bhadrakālī, other forms of Sakti also occur in Chidambaram gopuras. A significant group among them is the representation of the three Saktis, so familiar to the Saiva Siddhantins, viz. Iccā Sakti, Jñāna Sakti and Kriyā Sakti. Among the three, two bearing label inscriptions, Jñānasakti and Kriyāsakti have survived. Probably the third one was also portrayed but it is not yet identified. The Gopura built about a hundred years later at Thiruvanaikkaval in the reign of Jatavarman Sundara Pandya, has all the three Saktis in the lower niches of the gopura.

The Jñānasakti and Kriyāsakti images in the Chidambaram Gopuras are two armed, both holding what looks like chouri. Commenting on them, James Harle rightly observes "The even distribution of these images among the four gopuras and the almost identical position which they occupy, show that they definitely belong to the iconographical plan of the gopura".

Lakshmi and Sarasvati (Pl. 56) are also portrayed in the lower tier of the gopura.

Other forms of feminine deities which find prominent place in the gopuras are Ganga (Pl. 57) and Yamuna. The representation of Ganga and Yamuna, at the entrance can be traced back to the Pallava period. In the Mahendravarman's gṛham, in front of the Kailasanatha temple of Kanchi, Ganga and Yamuna are portrayed at the entrance to the garbhagṛha. In later gopuras, these Goddesses are figured at the entrance often portrayed as holding meandering creepers. Ganga will stand on Makara and Yamuna on turtle. In Chidambaram, the Ganga is shown without the makara and Yamuna is shown on turtle (Pl. 58).

Tanjore Gopuras

It is necessary to mention here that in the two Gopuras of Tanjore erected in the reign of Rājārāja, we do not come across the portrayal of these Saktis. Various aspects of Siva and his exploits are portrayed in the base of the inner Gopura. In the southern side of the innerside of the inner Gopura, a few sculptures representing Saptamātās are portrayed. They are in moving stance participating in some exploits which are not very clear. Some of them are completely worn out. The absence of Sakti images in the Gopuras of Rājārāja in 1000 A.D., would indicate that the philosophic concepts, relating to Iccā, Jñāna, Kriyā Saktis and also other Saktis, like Sānti Sakti, Sāntiyātita Sakti have not yet emerged into iconographic concepts in 11th century and if they had, they had not yet become dominant factors in the sculptural dispositions. However we have seen in the chapter on Thirumandiram, which we have assigned to 8th century A.D., the concepts of Iccā, Jñāna and Kriyā Saktis are well developed. Why it has not developed in the iconographical side is difficult to say. But what we are able to say at this stage is that the various Saktis as explained in Saiva Siddhanta philosophy, are given iconographic form and representation in the 12th century A.D.

Darasuram Gopura

The temple at Darasuram, near Kumbakonam was built by Rājārāja Chola II. Though this is smaller than the two big temples of Tanjore and Gangaikondacholapuram, it is a fine example of the 12th century A.D. It has many special characters.

This was built after the great Tamil works Kalingattupparani by Jayankondar and Periya Puranam by Sekkilar were composed, directly due to the patronage of Chola rulers. We have discussed both these texts earlier. We have shown how the worship of Durgā-Kālī was extolled to a great extent in Kalingattupparani. Many scholars from Āryadesa, and Gauḍadesa came and settled in Tamil country also due to the patronage of Imperial Chola, like Rājarāja I and Rājendra I. With them they have brought the Tantric cult with all its concepts. Kulottunga chola I was himself a descendant of the Eastern Chalukyar line. He spend the early part of war campaigns in Kalinga and won a great battle. He was influenced by the Tantric cult of the region. All these royal conquests resulted in cultural contacts particularly in the royal courts. Thus the temple at Darasuram (Rājarājapuram) erected by Rājarāja II, imbibed the Tantric thoughts that were current then. We have mentioned that atleast four Paranis were composed within one hundred years, which shows the impact of the cult. Ottakkuttan a great poet who adorned the court of Rājarāja II, has sung his Takkayāgapparani as soon as the Darasuram temple was built. We have discussed this text also separately. As such the Darasuram temple is an important monument for the study of Tantric cult in 12th century A.D.

This was also the time when great works on Saiva Siddhanta system were being composed. All these are reflected in the monumental temple of Darasuram. We have discussed two important representations, Tripurā and Vishnumāya appearing in the Airavatesvara temple of Darasuram, separately.

We will discuss here the representations of Saktis in the outer Gopura of Darasuram temple. The outer gopura was in all probability built by Rājarāja II. The superstructure has crumbled. The lower part, built of stone, carries a number of niches, a good number of them carrying label inscriptions. In the northern niches of the Gopura (Western side) the following Saktis are mentioned.

Brahmāni, and Vaishnavi.

Correspondingly on the southern side are the following Saktis.

Sāntiyātita Sakti,
Sānti Sakti, and Vidyā Sakti.

In the eastern face we get Durgādevi, Sridevi and Sarasvati.

We may remember that in Chidambaram Gopuras, built almost at the same time, Durga, Lakshmi, Sarasvati, Tripurasundari, Bhadrakālī and Iccā Sakti, Jnāna Sakti and Kriyā Sakti are figured. But here we get a different tradition. The three Saktis Brahmāni, Vaishnavi and Rudrāni appear. The five Saktis generally adored as kalās in modern times are mentioned as Saktis as Sāntiyātita Sakti, Sānti Sakti etc. Unfortunately in a number of niches the sculptures are missing and in others they are lying covered. It is not possible to assess their iconographic variations. It is just of interest to say that the Saiva Siddhanta which emerged in this century in its full form was not only represented in philosophic thoughts and literature, but was also represented visually in sculptures giving a permanence.

The outer gopura at Tribhuvanam, near Kumbakonam, was built by the last of the great Chola rulers, Kulottunga III. The temple itself is called after him as Tribhuvanaviresvaram, but unfortunately most of the sculptures of the Gopura have disappeared and it is difficult to arrive at any conclusion. One Gopura, which is of interest, is Sundara Pandya Gopura at Thiruvanaikkoil probably built by Jatavarman Sundarapandya in the later half of the 13th century. J.C. Harle has discussed this Gopura also in his work. It follows the Chidambaram Gopuras in the lay out and distribution of images. However one significant inclusion is the pair of Lakshmi and Sarasvati at the entrance. The Gopura at Madurai has also lost many of its sculptures.

In the Vijayanagar reign particularly in the period of Krishnadevaraya 16th cent. A.D., great Gopuras became the norm of the day. Krishnadevaraya himself was responsible for lofty towers at places like Kalahasti, Kanchi, Chidambaram and Thiruvannamalai. At Chidambaram, he rebuilt the northern Gopura. But the sculptures which were originally in the Gopura have been reused and they follow the pattern of the other Gopuras. But in other places like Ekambaranatha temple of Kanchi, only feeble attempts are made to portray images in the niches of the Gopura. Still in later periods no sculpture was included in the lower niches of the Gopuras.

In Bronzes

The contribution of the Chola dynasty to the art of Bronze casting is well known. It is not an exaggeration to say that the very large number of bronzes that are found in various temples are as a result of direct patronage given by the Chola rulers and their queens. Innumerable references are met with in inscriptions to the setting up of bronze images by the Chola rulers themselves. Inscriptions begin to appear from the reign of Parāntaka, in large numbers relating to metal icons. However the peak period in the art was reached in the reign of Rājārāja I. We have discussed earlier some outstanding pieces of Kālī images in metal. Some more images of Kālī are in the Madras Museum collection. The Kālī from Senniyan Viduthi is a wellknown example, bearing a dedicatory inscription on the pedestal which is however worn out.

Durga images in bronze are not rare though we have not come across any image which could be assigned to the reign of the Vijayalaya, Āditya or even Parāntaka. We have illustrated in this study three early Durga images, all of which are to be assigned to the reign of Rājārāja I. The fine image of Durga (Pl. 59) is in the Tanjore Art Gallery while Pl. 60, is in the Dharmapuram Mutt collections. And yet a third one comes from Vadagur. All the three bear youthful countenance and carry cakra and sankha in the upper arms and abhaya and kaṭihasta in the lower arms. Most of the Durga images of the Chola period followed this pattern.

In the great temple of Tanjore a bronze image of Durga Paramesvari, by a certain Vadugan in the reign of Rājārāja. The image has not survived.

A significant aspect that deserves special mention in Bronze image is the setting up of Devi icons as consorts of various aspects of Siva. When various images of Siva were gifted, the consorts always referred to as Umaparamesvari was also made and gifted. In the temple of Rājarāja at Tanjore many Siva bronzes were gifted with their consorts Umaparamesvari. The term Umaparamesvari is very significant. She is now considered the supreme Goddess.

It is shown elsewhere that the erection of monumental temples to Devi as Kamakkottam became very popular from the reign of Kulottunga I. Naralokavira, one of the generals of Kulottunga I, and his son Vikrama Chola, was a great builder. He has made extensive additions to Chidambaram and Thiruvadigai temples. Sri B. Natarajan in his recent work on the city of "the cosmic dancer" writes on the Amman shrine of Chidambaram as follows.

• "There was no independent Amman shrine in any of the South Indian temples till the days of Kulottunga I. It seems very likely that the Sivakamisundari Amman shrine built by the later Cholas was the first among independent Amman shrines" Further he says "Epigraphical evidence indicates that the construction of this shrine should have been undertaken by Naralokavira in the reign of Kulottunga and Vikrama Chola and it seems to have been completed in the days of Kulottunga II. Final additions were made in the time of the Pallava Kopperunjinga and Kulottunga III."

The Vimana called Kamakkottam was already in existence in the reign of Kulottunga and Naralokavira built an enclosure, a mandapa and a dvārasāla

*Tasmin devyās sikhariduhituh Kāmakōshta sthitāyāh
Prākārajyām apī dayitam asau
Kliptavān Mandapamca*

Naralokavira's inscription is both in Sanskrit and Tamil. In both the epigraphs, the additions carried out to the Kamakōṭṭa alone are mentioned but no reference to the construction of the Amman shrine. We therefore conclude that the Amman shrine was in existence before the time of Kulottunga I, but it received great benefactions during his reign and his successors. Naralokavira's contribution were as mentioned earlier the construction of the enclosure, a dancing hall and the sālā in front of the shrine. He also gave a pitambara to the Goddess. Another gift was provisions for milk and oil for offering to the Goddess. These were to be offered to the universal Mother and distributed to children which he considered as a form of worship (SI1. IV. 225). The enclosure erected by Naralokavira is still in existence. It is not merely an enclosure but a monumental art. In the base of the enclosure are excellent sculptures, of dancers both males and females in a row. They play on various musical instruments and dance in delightful poses. (Pls. 61, 62 and 63). But a matter of interest is that the female dancers are shown in a number of cases carrying damaru and sūla. The worshippers of the Devi are said to come to the temple of the Goddess, dancing in ecstasy to the beat of damarukas (Kalingattuppurani). The Portrayal of women with sūla and damaruka, dancing in ecstasy, is specially associated with the Devi cult.

From the time of Kulottunga I, it was a great period in the history of Sivakami temple of Chidambaram. Vikrama Chola the son and successor of Kulottunga gifted many valuables to this shrine.

Kulottunga III, was a great devotee of the Goddess. He covered the Kāmakkot-tam shrine, the enclosure and the entrance Gopura of the Amman shrine with gold. He also covered the prākāra harmya with gold. But as the present main shrine has undergone rebuilding, we are unable to come to any conclusion on its original lay out. As it is, it is in the form of the other Vimana of Nataraja and is rectangular in shape. The three main devakoshtas carry the three saktis.

Tillaikkāli Temple

An important temple which needs study in this connection is the Tillaikkāli temple at Chidambaram. It was built in the reign of Kopperunjinga, a turbulent Pallava Chieftain in the middle of 13th century A.D. This Kāli temple is closely related to the Natarāja shrine, according to local legends. As it not only falls within the later Chola period but also important for the study of Kāli worship in 13th century A.D. we are discussing it here in detail.

According to an inscription, fifty Kulis of land were purchased by one Cholakkon, a local officer of Kopperunjinga, in his 8th regnal year for building the temple of Piḍāriyār, the temple Campus, and the street for the temple servants (ARE. 401/1903). According to epigraphs the main deity of this temple is called Tillaivanam Uḍaiya Paramesvari. The temple is a rectangular Sāla Vimāna with an Ardhamandapa in the front. It carries devakoshtas in the three main sides of the Vimāna and also the ardhamandapa. The temple faces west. The main niches of the vimāna carry Brahmāni in the north, Vaishnavi in the east (back) and Rudrāni in the south. The niches of the ardhamandapa carry Durga in the north and Sarasvati in the south. Guarding the entrance are Kāli's dvarapālikas.

The main deity is seated with four heads and four arms, holding akshamala and sūla in the upper arms and pānapātra and lotus in the lower arms. A few peculiar characters of this image needs mention. That She has four heads is unique and on account of it is now called Brahma Cāmuṇḍā. That She is the presiding deity of knowledge is indicated by the akshamala. Her Kāli aspect is emphasised by the kapāla held in her main right arm. Otherwise she is a soumya devatā, wearing jaṭāmakuta, with none of the terrific signs portrayed. She is probably adored here, as Manonmani, the Parādevatā. Below her feet is shown lying figure like the Preta. A bronze image of this deity which is an exact replica of the main stone image is under worship now as the processional deity but the bronze is a late figure probably belonging to 18th century A.D.

But an excellent bronze (Pl. 65) which could be assigned to the 11th century is also under worship in the temple. It is four armed, seated on a lotus pedestal over a bhadrāsana. The upper two arms are in kaṭaka pose but without the emblems. The main right holds kapāla and the left is in the form of kaṭaka. She is with one head wearing jaṭāmakuta. Below her hanging right leg is the preta lying flat. This is a very fine representation of the saumya form of Kālī and rightly she was called the Supreme Goddess of Tillaivana, Tillai vanam uḍaya Paramesvari. In all probability the original deity before the reconstruction of the shrine by Kopperunjinga, was of this iconographic form. The four headed Devi was installed by Kopperunjinga.

The iconography of the koṣṭha devatas are as follows. Brahmani four armed, seated with three heads; holds akṣhamala, kamandala, abhaya and āhuyavarada. Vaishnavi—seated, four armed holding cakra, sanka, abhaya and varada. Rudrāni—four armed, seated holding Parasu, deer, abhaya, and ābūjavarada. Durga in the ardhamandapa is six armed, standing on the head of Mahisha holding cakra, sanka, bow, arrow, abhaya and kaṭihasta. Saraswati—holding vīṇa in her arms. The dvārapālikas are two armed holding kapāla and flower.

Darasuram Amman Shrine

Another great temple built in the 13th century to the Goddess is the Amman shrine at Darasuram which is an elaborate structure luckily well preserved and may be cited as a fine example of Amman shrine of 13th century. The structure is Sāla type on a high upapitha. It was probably built by Jatavarman Sundarapandya in 13th century. The main sanctum has niches on all the three sides carrying the three Saktis, Iccā Sakti, Jñāna Sakti and Kriyā Sakti, all the three shown standing with parasu, sūla, abhaya and varada. (Pls. 67, 68). They are flanked by female chouri bearers. The front mandapa has also niches but they are empty. The entrance steps carry superbly carved rider motives. The dvārapālikas are shown holding sword and shield (Pls. 69, 70).

A few representations of Saktis which can not be discussed in the chronological order, but belong to the Chola period need also special mention.

Ashtamatas

In the Siva temple of Thiruvaiyaru is preserved a group of Saktis carved on a single slab (Pl. 71). There are altogether nine figures in the group. All the figures are shown seated on lotus pedestals, with only two arms holding what looks like a lotus flower with a long stem in the right arm and placing the left on the thigh. All of them are shown with a lying preta below their feet. The central figure is Siva seated majestically. On either side of him are shown four Devis on either side. The first seven seem to be the Saptamātas. Kaumari is shown seated immediately to the right of Siva and can be identified with her head dress. The Devi immediately to the left of Siva is Varahi also identifiable by her Varaha face. The tall cylindrical kirita in the next Devi, suggests She is Indrani. Camuṇḍa is clearly seen by her kesabhara and naga breast-band. Obviously the first three represent Brāhmi, Māhesvari and Vaishnavi. The last one is probably Lakshmi. The representation of Ashtamatas or what may be called Ashta Saktis is rare in South India. In northern India the representation is quite common. In some representations in Northern India, Siva is shown in the centre and four Mātās each on either side. An interesting example is the famous Ravan Padi cave at Aihole where Siva dances in the centre and is flanked by Saptamātas and Parvati. In Thiruvaiyaru panel also, Siva is shown in the centre, but what is significant is the presense of preta below the feet of all the images which shows it is essentially a Tantric cult-image.

Tantric Cult Images Brought from Other Lands by the Cholas

Perhaps an important aspect of Tantric ideas, permeating the Chola country in the 11th and 12th centuries A.D. are reflected in the sculptures brought as war trophies by the Imperial Chola rulers from the Chalukya and Kalinga regions. A good number of sculptures from other regions brought into the Chola country are still preserved in and around Gangaikonda-cholapuram.

Kalinga Sculptures

A group of three sculptures (Pls. 72, 73 & 74) found in Sengamedu about a mile to the east of Gangaikonda-cholapuram are excellent specimens of Kalinga art. Two of them are Bhairava images, one broken. They are four armed, standing figures holding sūla, damaru, sword and kapāla. Siva is shown naked with a string of skulls going upto his ankle. In the waist are shown kinkinis. On to his right is Bhairavi, an ematiated figure holding a severed head. To the right is an ematiated male figure. A superb image of Bhairavi (Pl. 74) is also in the same place. The Devi is shown naked with eight arms and holds sūla, a snake, a sword and what looks like a fore arm, in her right arms. In the left arms are damaruka, katvāṅga, munda and probably kapāla (this is broken). Below the munda is a jackel jumping up; to her right is a male figure standing. These three sculptures are excellent specimens of Kalinga art and are to be assigned to 8-9 century A.D. Probably they were brought as war trophies during Rajendra's expedition to gangetic plain. The bringing of these images should not be viewed in isolation.

In the reign of Rajendra, a temple was erected to Yogesvara and Yogini in Kolar. The emphasis on Bhairava and Bhairavi (Kali) cult, that we witness from the second half of the 11th century A.D. should be attributed to the bringing of this cult images from Kalinga, where Tantric element was at its height. An exact replica of the Bhairavi but executed by a local artist is also in the same place which shows that the Bhairavi cult has taken deep roots in the Chola Capital.

Nolamba and Chalukya Sculptures

Besides this fine group there are a number of other Durga images. A Nolamba sculpture now preserved in Manmedu, a part of Gangaikonda-cholapuram (Pl. 75), represents Durga Mahishamardini. Another similar figure is under worship in the great temple of Gangaikonda-cholapuram itself. These represent Nolamba tradition flowing into the Chola country. A remarkable sculpture representing Durga Mahishamardini brought from the Chalukyan region is preserved in the Virareddy street, a part of Gangaikonda-cholapuram. Among the war trophies brought by the imperial Cholas, Durga and Kali images are more in number, which suggest that the Chola soldiers and rulers attached great importance to these cult images.

SOMASKANDA

Pallava Period

One of the most important representations in Pallava times is the Somaskanda panel in the back wall of the Sanctum of Siva temples. In the decidedly Mahendra's cave temples (7th century A.D.) the Somaskanda image is not noticed. However, we get them in the monuments, which are decidedly of the reign of Rājasimha (Early 8th century A.D.) as in the temple of Kailasanatha at Kanchi, Talagirisvara at Panamalai and the shore temple at Mamallapuram. In these cases, Siva is shown seated on a pedestal with four arms and by his side is shown Devi also seated, two armed with the baby Skanda seated on her lap. Somaskanda is shown in the following temples at Mamallapuram, Dharmarāja ratha, Mahishamardini cave, Rāmānuja mandapa, Sea-shore temples, Mukundanāyanār temple, and the Saluvankuppam cave.

In Monoliths

In the Dharmarāja ratha Somaskanda is shown in the sanctum of the third floor. In the centre of the back wall, a shallow niche is carved where Siva seated with Devi and Skanda, is shown. Siva is four armed, holding a snake in the upper right arm and an indistinct emblem in the left. To his left is Pārvati seated turned towards her lord with the baby in her lap. The Devi shown as a young mother is two armed, holding the baby in her left arm and the right is probably bent. Flanking this niche are shown Brahma to the right and Vishnu to the left, both four armed, adoring the main deity. The standing figures of Brahma and Vishnu are almost of the same size as that of Siva. Besides the Dharmarāja ratha no other monolith in Mamallapuram carries the image of Somaskanda.

In Caves

Among the cave temples at Mamallapuram the most important to carry this representation is the famous Mahishamardini cave. In the central sanctum of this cave is seen the biggest Somaskanda in Mamallapuram. Siva and Pārvati are shown seated on a pedestal, Pārvati with Skanda on her lap. Below their seat is shown a big Nandi. On either side of Siva in the same panel are shown Brahma and Vishnu. In the centre of the sanctum there is a socket to receive a linga and traces of its Yonipitha are visible. The other cave temple to have had Somaskanda, which seems to have been chiselled off at a later date is Rāmānuja mandapa. The traces of Somaskanda at the back wall of the sanctum are visible. But we will not say anything about its form as only faint traces exist.

It must be admitted that two temples exist here, one a cave temple and another a monolith bearing inscriptions in which they are called Isvaragrhas, i.e., Siva temples and they are Dharmarāja mandapa and Ganesa ratha. There are no Somaskanda panels in these two temples.

The Atiranacanda cave temple at Saluvankuppam, has three Somaskandas, one in the sanctum and two on the back wall of the front mandapa, one on either side of the sanctum. The Panels conform to the general pattern, and the repetition of this in the same temple shows that it was a favourite theme with the creator. In this connection two points deserve special mention. In the inscription of the same cave temple, the King says "let Pasupati ever reside in this temple with Parvati and Guha". The inscription which incidentally is a foundation epigraph, points to the fact that the Somaskanda panel, was carved with the temple. It is also significant that king Rājasimha who caused these monuments, likened himself to Guha, the son of Paramesvara.

In Structural Temples

The following structural temples built by Rājasimha carry Somaskanda panels; Kailasanatha at Kanchi, Talagirisvara at Panamalai, the Sea-shore temple and Mukundanayanar at Mamallapuram, and the Vedagirisvara temple at Thirukkalukkunram. The temples built by Rājasimha's son Mahendravarman at Kanchi also carry this panel. Some of the temples built almost at the same period at Kanchi, like Muktesvara, Matangisvara, Piravatana, Iravatana, and Airavatesvara also carry this panel.

There is a cave temple dedicated to Siva, Vishnu and Subrahmanya at Mamallapuram, now called Trimurti cave. In this cave the central shrine is dedicated to Siva. Here Siva is shown standing in samabanga, with four arms. Siva holds parasu with the upper right arm, akshamāla with the upper left; lower right is in abhaya and the lower left in kaṭihasta. He is flanked by ganas on top and devotees below. In front of the image and in the centre of the sanctum is a Sivalinga. The image of Subrahmanya in the northern sanctum and that of Vishnu in the southern sanctum are also of the same size and posture as Siva in the central sanctum. This indicates that besides Somaskanda panel, Siva is shown sometimes also in his iconic form at the back wall of the sanctum. This we have three different modes of representing Siva in the Sanctum in Pallava temples : (a) Only a Sivalinga in the centre of the centre of the sanctum, (b) a Sivalinga in the centre and Somaskanda at the back wall, and (c) Sivalinga in the centre with a standing form of Siva at the back wall of the Sanctum.

At Melacheri near Gingee, an excavated cave is found bearing an inscription which calls the temple Sikhari Pallavesvara grham. (K.R.S. 116). The name of the maker is called king Chandrāditya who also had the title Pallava. In spite of the fact that the temple is called Pallavesvara grham, K.R. Srinivasan holds that it was not excavated by any Pallava King. He also states that the appellation Āditya is common to Chalukya name. This is not correct because the appellation Āditya is also found occurring for Pallavas. Paramesvaraverman is called Somāditya. Rājasimha is called Pallavaditya, and Yugāndāditya. The temple is certainly a Pallava foundation as it bears the name Pallavesvaragriham. Who this Pallava king Chandrāditya who also bore the title Sikhari is not clear. May be this was excavated in the 8th century A.D. The important fact that deserves mention about this temple is the rock-cut linga in the centre of the sanctum. The linga is cylindrical and the Āvudaiyār octoganal in shape. An image of Pārvati is carved in a niche, in the northern wall of the mandapa. Carving of rock-cut lingas inside the sanctum of the Siva temple in the 7th century, in the Pallava territory and by the Pallavas is thus established.

In the far south a number of excavated caves have been brought to light. A number of these caves like the ones at Pillaiyarpatti, Thirumeyyam, Kunrakkudi and other places show that rock-cut lingas were excavated along with the cave temples. We have one important cave temple which is of historic interest. It is the main temple at Thirupparankunram. This was excavated in the reign of Pāṇḍya ruler Parantaka Nedunjadaiyan by one of his general.

In the inscription the temple is called Isvaragrham. But it is dedicated to five Gods namely Siva, Vishnu, Subrahmanya, Ganapathi and Durga. We will have more to say about this temple later but what is significant is the presense of Somaskanda at the back wall of the sanctum of the Siva shrine. Somaskanda panels, at the back wall of the sanctum seem to have assumed significance in 18th century A.D.

Kapālesvara and Kapālika

Inside the Ekambaresvara temple of Kanchi there is a shrine bearing Pallava features. It has of late, been plastered and renovated but fortunately the interior is intact. Inside the sanctum, at the back wall are shown Siva and Pārvati seated, like the Somaskanda panels. The Skanda is not present in the panel. The representation of Devi and Siva are also unique. Both of them are shown with four arms and holding identical emblems in their arms. In their upper right arm they hold trisula with a long handle; the upper left holds a khatvanga, a bone topped by a skull. It has a flying cloth suggesting katvangadhvaja. In the lower right arm is shown a long bladed sword and in the left is kapāla. It is very interesting to see both Siva and Devi holding the same emblems particularly sword, kapāla and khatvanga which suggest their association with the Kapalika cult. Both Siva and Devi are shown with jatamakuta. Undoubtedly the images are from the hands of the Pallava artists and are assignable to 8th century A.D. That Kanchi was a great centre of Kapalikas even in 7th century, is known from Mattavillāsa prahasana of Mahendra. The presense of this group is thus interesting.

Umāmahesvara

In the chola period, the representation of Somaskanda has taken a different form. In some temples of the chola region Umāmahesvara images are found instead of Somaskanda. The date of these temples are not easy of determination as they have undergone renovations. The following are the few places where such representations are seen. Thirunallur, Srikali, both in Tanjore District, Thiruvadigai in South Arcot, Ekambaresvara in Kanchipuram, Thiruverkadu in Chingleput District and the Siva temple at Vilakkanampundi also in the Chingleput district. The Siva temple at Thiruvadigai was a Pallava foundation, renovated by Nrpatunga in 9th century and was further renovated in the 14th century A.D. The walls of the garbhagrha are built of brick and so the Umāmahesvara image is made of brick and stucco. The Siva temple at Vilakkanampundi, is called Vijayālaya Cholisvaram in inscription. It was built in the 9th century A.D. The walls of the sanctum are built of bricks and the image of Umāmahesvara is also stucco. It is not known how many times this image has been retouched and we cannot come to any conclusion on the basis of their form, but we only know that the tradition of representing Umāmaheśvara at the back wall continued. Thiruverkadu Siva temple is a 12th century stone structure probably built in the reign of Kulottunga III. It carries an image of Umāmaheśvara in stone at the back wall of the sanctum. The Ekambareshvara temple at Kanchipuram was in existence even in 7th century but has been renovated many times. About fifty years ago the entire garbhagrha was completely renewed of stone. A Somaskanda image in stone is found on the back wall of the sanctum, which is a 20th century image. Probably the original sanctum had this feature.

All this indicate that images of Umāmaheśvara or Somaskanda were portrayed in some temples, at the back wall of the sanctum from 8th century A.D.

Bronzes

The earliest Somaskanda image in bronze to have survived is the one from Thiruvālangadu now preserved in the Madras Museum (Pl. 83). In this group Siva and Umā are well portrayed seated on a pedestal. The Skanda accompanying the universal parents was not found but that was originally there is seen from a separate seat provided in the pedestal. Siva appears with four arms holding paraśu and mṛga in the upper arms and kapāla and trisula in the lower ones. The Devi seated to the left, is two armed holding a padma in her right arm and āhuyavarada mudra in the left arm. She is young, lithe and beautiful. Among the bronze images of the South so far brought to notice, this is perhaps the earliest representation of Somaskanda, to be assigned to the beginning of the 9th century A.D. Among the metal images of Devi, this is not only the earliest but also one of the finest representations to have survived. The image clearly bears Pallava imprint.

We have seen that in the 8th century Pallava temples, Somaskanda panels are represented at the back wall of the sanctum. Evidently Siva and Pārvati with their child were invoked and worshipped in the sanctum and have assumed ritual importance. We have also seen that in the installation of Sivalinga, the Sakti is consecrated in the piṭha. What is significant is that Somaskanda assumed the representative form for Linga and this had an important effect in the later periods. While Linga represented Siva in the sanctum, the metal of Somaskanda represented the main God in festivals. During most of the festivals the Somaskanda images are taken out in procession and as such are to be seen invariably in all the Siva temples. It is difficult to say when this trend took a concrete form. We know that even by the beginning of 7th century the Devaram hymns refers to deities being taken out in procession. Appar, a contemporary of Mahendravarman, refers to the Lord Vīthi Vīṭanka, taken out in procession. The Somaskanda image of Thiruvārur temple, is called Vīthi Vīṭankar. There is a tradition that Muchukunda Chola, one of the early members of the chola dynasty, obtained the image of Somaskanda from Indra. All this tradition indicates, that the worship of Somaskanda is of sufficient antiquity. Whether the processional image referred to by Appar was a Somaskanda bronze, we cannot say.

But in the 8th century A.D., we find the Somaskanda panels at the back wall of the sanctum. But no Somaskanda Bronze of 7th or 8th century has survived. The earliest to have survived is the present image from Thiruvallangadu, under discussion. But even this is a small one hardly about one foot in height. It must also be mentioned that all the bronze images so far noticed, assignable to the Pallava period are small in size. We are not sure, whether this was a processional image.

From the end of the 9th century A.D., however we begin to get big metal images of Somaskanda. The one coming from Kilaiyur, now preserved in the Tanjore Art Gallery, is an early group.

Tripurasundari

One of the most important aspects of Sakti, often referred to is Tripurasundari, Tripura Bhairavi or Tripurā. We have seen that she is referred to in Thirumandiram. Tripurasundari is shown as the consort of Tripurāntaka Siva, in art. In mediaeval Siva temples, where separate shrines are provided for Pārvati, she is called Tripurasundari in some places, but she shares the common iconographic features with other Pārvati images with no special distinguishing attributes. When she is adored in yantras, she is also designated as Tripurā or Mahā-Tripurasundari.

Some important Tripurāntaka images have come down to us from the 8th century A.D. The most important ones come from the Kailasanatha temple of Kanchi. In the North-Western shrine, (anga ālaya) attached to the main sanctum, Siva is shown riding his charriot. The panel, a massive one, occupies the entire back wall of the shrine. It is in the side wall of the shrine Pārvati is shown. In this illustration she would be Tripurasundari.

Again in the northern wall of the main sanctum Siva is shown riding his charriot, as Tripurāntaka. In his left is shown Devi riding on her lion, also in war costumes. Here she is again Tripurasundari or Tripurā. In one of the small cells in the enclosure of the same temple is shown Tripurāntaka where again she is also represented. In one of the small temples built by the queens of Rājasimha, in front of the Kailasanatha temple, the Tripurāntaka aspect of Siva is portrayed at the back, where the Devi is shown by the side. In the sea-shore temple at Mamallapuram, Siva as Tripurāntaka is shown in the northern wall. In the minor Pallava temples at Kanchi, the Tripurāntaka aspect of Siva does not find a prominent place.

The Virattana temple at Thiruvadigai, is a Pallava foundation. It is dedicated to Siva as Tripurāntaka. The temple was renovated in the reign of Pallava Nripatunga and the base of the main shrine was strengthened with stone mouldings in the 14th century by the Kerala ruler Ravivarman Kulasekhara. Above the adhishtana, the entire superstructure is of brick and mortar. It has angālayas like the Kailasanatha temple of Kanchi. The Amman shrine in the temple is a late construction. In one of the main walls of the sanctum on the southern side is a figure of Tripurāntaka in stucco but Devi does not receive any prominence there.

In the far south, near Trivandram is an excavated cave at Viliñjam assignable to 8th century A.D. On the side of the excavated cell, are figure-sculptures, one of which represent Tripurāntaka Siva, but no Devi is represented there.

In the early chola temples Siva is seen as Tripurāntaka in one of the Devakoshtas, sometimes accompanied by the Devi but in most cases appearing without the Devi. A remarkable pair of Tripurāntaka and Tripurasundari, which were originally in the Siva temple, Kodumbalur, is now preserved in the Madras Museum. Siva wearing the war costumes of Channavira and the bow and arrow is clearly Tripurāntaka, but he is shown here not as a destroyer, but as a benign Lord, bestowing boon. The accompanying Tripurasundari image is one of the finest stone sculpture of the Goddess made by the early chola artists. The Goddess is in her prime of youth, and with her in-turned eyes, seems to be in a blissful mood. She carries a lilly in her right arm and has placed her left on the thigh.

The great temple of Tanjore is an important landmark in many aspects. Built about 1000 A.D., by Rājarāja I, the greatest of chola emperors, the temple has many remarkable sculptures and paintings. Being a great conqueror Rājarāja was deeply fascinated by the Tripurāntaka aspect of Siva. The representation is repeated in all the niches of the upper row of the main Vimāna, a unique feature not noticed in any other temple. But in none of them, Devi is shown accompanying the lord. The Tripurāntaka theme is repeated in the fine painting in the inner wall of the sāndhāra passage of the main shrine. The painting is unquestionably the best representation of Tripurāntaka in Indian art. Even as a destroyer, Siva appears here in his finest form, full of fury, his eyes emitting fire and the arms ready to strike the final blow, the stance itself powerful enough to pulverise the three cities of the Asuras. In this powerful delineation of the theme, the Devi is also seen in animated action seated on her lion attacking the asuras. She is also followed by Kālī. We will return to the painting later.

Some of the finest representation, of Tripurāntaka and Tripurasundari images were also made in bronze in the chola period. Though a good number of them have survived we will discuss only three representations to show the popularity of the theme. The earliest and perhaps the best representation in bronze is now preserved in the Siva temple at Konerirajapuram. Made and gifted by the holy chola queen, Sembiyan Mahadevi, the image called Tripuravijaya in inscription, shows Siva standing with four arms, accompanied by Pārvati as Tripurasundari (Pl. 86). This Tripurasundari bronze is the loveliest production of the chola bronze maker. Another good representation of Tripurāntaka in Bronze comes from Tanjore temple. It is now preserved in the Tanjore Art Gallery.¹ The God is probably identical with Tanjai Alagar of the inscription. But its consort has not survived. The Kongu artists have given us a unique specimen of Tripurāntaka and Tripurasundari² (Pl. 87) in the local idiom. The images are now under worship in Kodumudi in Coimbatore District. Poised in majestic stance, the image of Siva signifies the ease with which the three cities of the devils were destroyed. The accompanying Devi is like a tender creeper, standing with her left arm rested on a attendant female, standing nearby. There are many other examples of this in bronze but this need not detain us here.

There is one aspect of Tripurāntaka we must mention. In most of the temples the annual festival closes with the car festival in which the bronze image of the temple will be decorated and placed and drawn in procession around the village. The car festival signifies, Siva riding his charriot as Tripurāntaka and the Devi accompanying him would be the Tripurasundari.

In all the above instances the Devi manifesting herself as Tripurasundari, appears as the consort of Siva and not independently.

KANYA KUMARI TEMPLE

An important temple for the understanding of South Indian Sakti cult is the temple of Kanyakumari, at the southern most tip of India. This is a temple solely dedicated to the goddess as Kanya and is adored as such from very ancient times. The reference in later Vedic literature to kātyāyanyāya Vidmahe, Kanya Kumārī dhīmahi, Tanno durgi pracodayāt, is taken to refer to this goddess of Tamil land by some scholars. The 'Periplus of the Erethraean sea' assigned to the first century after Christ makes a positive reference to the worship of this deity. "Beyond this there is another place called Comari at which are the cape of the comari and a harbour. Hither come those men who wish to consecrate themselves for the rest of their lives and bathe and dwell in celibacy and women also do the same, for it is told that a goddess once dwelt here and bathed."

The present image of the goddess is two armed (Pl. 82), holding an akshamala in the right arm and kati hasta in the left. It is a rare representation. The presentation of the Devi with only two arms, is probably to signify her Virgin aspect. That she was the embodiment of knowledge, as Uma Haimavati is an Upanishadic concept. The akshamala in the right arm of the Devi is indicative of her Jñāna aspect. What is interesting is that even before the Christian era, the Vedic concepts of Kanya, and Uma Haimavati have become a part of the Tamil Country. This is significant in two ways. That Vedic ideas have been given permanance in this deity. Secondly even in such early period, Vedic cult, which was mainly concerned with Yagas, have accepted the murti worship (i.e. the image worship) and thirdly local legends have already grown around this shrine in the first century A.D.

Kanyakumari was revered and respected by the Pandya rulers. They often delighted themselves in calling themselves as the lords Kumari shore, Kumaritturaivan. The imperial cholas were great devotees of goddess Kanyakumari. A number of Chola rulers have gifted wealth personally for worship in the temple. More than fifty inscriptions have been copied from this temple, some of them being fragmentary. Among them most of them relate to the rule period of the Imperial Cholas. Rajaraja, Rajendra, Rajadhi raja, Sundara chola Pandya, Kulothunga, Vikrama chola and others are thus represented in this temple.

In the inscription the Devi is called Kanya Bhātari, or Kanya Bhagavati. The wife of Sundara chola Pandya, Mukkokilanadigal seems to have been a great devotee of the goddess. Her attendant is seen gifting a perpetual lamp to the goddess. Rajendra II, personally gifted the proceeds from a number of villages, for worship in the temple on the birth day of one of his queens Kilanadigal. The inscription of his successor Virarajendra Chola, is a historic record giving the geneology of the Chola till the granter. Virarajendra himself gifted a number of villages to the Worship in the temple. The great period in the history of the temple, was in the reigns of the imperial cholas. In the succeeding period, it has received benefactions in the hands of later Pandyas and the rulers of Travancore. The present structure of the shrine seems to date from the time of the Cholas. Additions were made in later times. Certain important concepts connected with the temple are that the goddess is Kanya and as such there is no shrine for Siva here. That she did penance to marry Siva is also associated with this temple.

THE MEENAKSHI TEMPLE, MADURAI

One of the most important temples that deserves special attention with reference to the study of Devi cult in Tamilnad is the Meenakshi temple at Madurai. A brief study of the history of the temple may not be out of place here.

Early history

The temple is now popularly called Meenākshi temple, but in temple records is mentioned as Meenākshi Sundaresvara temple, Madurai. The main deity of this temple from ancient times is Siva. The main deity of Madurai is referred to in Sangam works assignable to the beginning of the Christian era as the Lord with parasu. The evening festival of this Lord and the great procession are referred to in the work Madurai Kānchi. It is therefore evident the antiquity of the Siva temple of Madurai could be traced as far back as the beginning of the Christian era. In the beginning of the 7th century it has become an important centre of pilgrimage as we find the Saivite saints, Jñānasambandar and Appar visiting this shrine and paying obeisance to the Lord. In the hymns, the main deity that receives adoration is Siva though in some instances Siva is said to be in the company of Devi with beautiful eyes resembling fish, Ankayar Kanni (Minakshi). Such references to Siva being in the company of Uma, are innumerable and are only in the general nature. It does not refer to the existence of a separate shrine for the Goddess in the Siva temple. The main deity continues to be Siva. The sthalapurānas i.e. the local legends, which arose about this temple till 13th century centre round Siva's sports. The sthalapurāna (Thiruvilayādalpurānam), written around 13th century speaks of the sports of Siva, where Devi occurs as a secondary deity.

In the 13th century, the chola ruler, Kulothunga III arranged for special festival to Lord Siva, when he conquered Madurai. Though by this time separate shrines have come into existence for Devi in Siva temples, we are not sure whether the Madurai temple had a separate shrine for the Devi in 13th century. The temple suffered damage and desecration early in the 14th century, during Malikkaffur's incursion and the Muslim rule. When the Nayak rule was established in Madurai, in the 16th century the temple received great benefactions.

The beginning of a great movement

Visvanātha Nāyak, the originator of the Nayak dynasty of Madurai, is said to have built the main Vimanas of both the Siva and Amman shrines. This may be placed about 1550 A.D. The architectural details of the shrines conform this date. So the present shrine of Minakshi is a middle 16th century structure. It is significant to note that the Vimāna of the Siva temple is built on an elaborate plan, showing eight elephants supporting the superstructure. This Vimāna has been built in its original position, retaining some earlier structures in their old condition.

The one hundred years

The one hundred years from 1550, is the peak period in the structural activity of the Madurai temple. The majority of the structures like the 1000 pillared hall, the 2nd eastern tower, Viravasantarāya maṇḍapa, the Kambattadi maṇḍapa (the maṇḍapa around the flag staff) the inner northern tower, and most of the gopuras, have come into existence towards the end of 16th century, during the reign of Virappa Nāyak. This ruler himself built the 1000 pillared maṇḍapa, the 2nd prakāra, the northern gopura, etc. It is seen that all these building activities are oriented towards Lord Siva who was still the central deity.

However the same ruler is said to have covered the flag staff of the Amman shrine with gold. This flag staff, gifted by one Mallappan, had become old due to usage and was renewed. This was again gilded with gold by Thirumalai Nāyak in the 17th century. The point of interest is that by the middle of the 16th century, the Devi shrine is beginning to assume importance, with a separate shrine and flag staff.

Thirumalai Nāyak

The advent of Thirumalai Nāyak in the 17th century (1623-1659) was a turning point in the history of the Madurai temple. He built that remarkable pudumandapa and began constructing the tallest tower possible, the latter however came up only upto the ceiling level of the ground floor. Thirumal Nāyak, constructed the enclosure around the Amman shrine, and the front maṇḍapa now called Kili maṇḍapa in front of the Amman shrine. His queens erected the Ashta sakti maṇḍapa, in front of the Devi shrine. A life size statue of Thirumal Nāyak is to be seen inside the enclosure of the Amman shrine. It is evident that the Devi has assumed greater significance in the reign of this ruler. But what may be considered a more significant emergence of the Devi cult, is the special festival arranged by Thirumal Nāyak, who considered himself a servant of the Goddess Minakshi, and proclaimed that he ruled the country on behalf of the Goddess as her agent. There is a significant work called tala pustaka, which gives an almost an eye witness account, of how Thirumal Nāyak celebrated the symbolic assumption of the kingdom every year during the annual festival. The following is a free rendering of the passage relating to this festival.

Senkolvila

The mode of receiving the sceptre by the Durai (ruler) is as follows. Till the Saka year 1544, corresponding to the year Dundubi, the ruler used to receive the sceptre from the main deity in the mūlasthanā, where it used to be religiously placed. But from the days of Thirumalai Sauri Ayyan, when the sthala assumed great fame and as a result of festivals instituted, the sthānikas, the Bhattas of both the sections, will meet the king on the morning of the 8th day festival, in the month of Chitra and invite to his kind notice. The king will complete his bath etc and will observe fast for the day. In the temple, special decorations would be done, for the Lord when the lamps would be lit. The six pillared mandapa in the Amman shrine would be decorated. The deity would be placed on a ratnasimhāsana (jewelled throne) in that mandapa. To the accompaniment of many torches, music, dance and melavādyā, the assembly will meet there. Anantaguna Sadāsiva Bhaṭṭa, will perform thirumanjana (anointment) with the golden pot intended for Pattābhisheka and perform mantra rites. Then the seven sthānikas will open the jewel-box, in the treasury and will take out the Pattābhisheka crown, and sceptre; for Getti Mudali, Tatpurushadeva Mudali, and Periyadeva Mudali, Makara Mudra for one, Makara flag for another will be taken out; golden stylus for Viluppādarāyan; Rshohā Mudra for Pāndi Nāṭṭu Mudali, and Nagarā Mudra for Kesava Dikshita would be taken out and carried in an ābharana plate. The sthānikas will carry them in procession to the accompaniment of music and reach the presense of Amman, where they would be placed in front of Her. The Nambi will perform pūja which will be followed by Pattābhisheka. The Bhaṭṭas of both sections will crown the Goddess and give the ceremonials sceptre in the hands of the deity. After this Neivadya would be offered. Then message would be sent to the ruler through the Kaṭṭiyakkārar that it is time (for his arrival).

The king will then mount the royal elephant decorated with howda, ambāri etc. He will be accompanied by the chieftains of the seventy two Pālayappaṭṭu. Each will be accompanied by his own men, carrying arms and their respective paraparnalia. The procession will be preceded by 18 types of melavādyas, many types of torches and day torches, crackers, and also dance and sports of the girls of Nāṭakasāla. The grandeur of the King's procession to the temple to receive the sceptre, is beyond description.

On reaching the temple the king will descend from the elephant and with all festivities reach the six pillared mandapa of the Amman shrine. There the shodasōpa-cāra dipāradhana would be performed to the Goddess. After the king has completed his worship, the Bhaṭṭas of both the sections will offer to the king prasādas like Vibhūti. The nilai garland and the twin garland, which were offered to the deity would be removed and offered to the ruler. The Sadarap parivaṭṭam and the double parivaṭṭam would be tied to the king. (Parivaṭṭam is a silken or other cloth received from the deity and tied around the head of the distinguished, as a mark of honour). The sceptre would be received from the deity and presented to the king. Then the seven sthānikas would be given vibhūti, sandal and other prasādas in the sannidhi. The Bhaṭṭas of both sections, will present the respective emblems to the sthānikas, The sthānikas will receive their respective emblems, and with the king proceed to the entrance; the king will mount the royal elephant and perform the festival called Pattana pravesa. Of the seven sthānikas, two Bhaṭṭas will ascend the palanquins, and the remaining five will mount horses and follow the king in the procession. The Goddess and the Ilaya Nayinār (Subrahmanya) who was in the six pillared mandapa will be brought to the street in procession. They will be placed in cetti (?) where abhisheka, neivedya and diparadhana would be performed. The Pallakku chokkar (Probably Lord Siva on Palanquin) will also be brought and then the temple will be locked. With all celebrations the Pattana pravesa would be performed and the procession will reach the Asthana mandapa in the royal palace. The Asthana mandapa would be tastefully decorated and the throne would be in the centre.

The king will enthrone the sceptre and will remain seated by its side. The sthānikas would be ordered to remain by the side. The sceptre will be offered neivedya and diparadhana. The local governors, Palaiyakkara Chieftains, Dalavay Pradhani and all others will pay their tributes to the king and the king will be pleased to receive them. Earlier Sadasiva Bhatta and Malava Chakravarti will be presented Sadira and Kadaya. The other sthānikas will be presented with Salvai and either ear ornament or a necklace. The other parijanas will receive presents according to their status. The sthalattars will then order the parijanas to return to the temple and perform their service to the God. Then the Lords in the palace, Palaiyakkarars and Kulankilars will be suitably honoured and ordered to retire to their quarters. The king will retire to the antapura. The sceptre will remain on the throne in Asthana mandapa. The next day punarpuja will be performed to the sceptre and will be returned to the temple. Thus the Pattabhisheka festival will be performed to the Goddess.

The above account of the talapustaka brings out some salient points that deserve special attention. It says that before the saka era 1544 (1622) that is before the accession of Thirumalai Nāyak, the sceptre used to be offered to the Mulasthana before being received and handed over to the king. It means that the concept then the king was ruling the country as a servant of the God was popular before Thirumalai Nāyak and the Nāyak rulers earlier to him have also performed this as a rite but it is not clear whether they considered the Lord Siva or the Goddess as the real ruler. But Thirumalai Nāyak considered Minakshi as the real ruler of the country and it was she who was crowned and given the sceptre.

Tradition continued

This tradition of symbolically receiving the royal sceptre from Goddess Minakshi, was continued by the successors of Thirumalai Nāyak. This writer has discovered a painting in the Madurai temple, depicting Queen Mangamma, a successor of Thirumalai Nāyak, standing before the Goddess and receiving the sceptre. This tradition is retained to this day in the chitra festival of the temple.

Impact of literature

The increasing importance given to the Goddess Minakshi is not only due to fabulous gifts and festivals instituted by the King Thirumalai Nāyak, but also due to the remarkable literary output during the same period. It is of interest to mention that the literary compositions, that date earlier to 17th century A.D., have Sundaresvara as the Lord of the poem but from the 17th century, the poems are in praise of Goddess Minakshi. Two important poets deserve special attention and both of them have received patronage in the hands of that great Nāyak ruler, Thirumalai. The two are Kumaragurupara, and Nilakanta Dikshita; the later is said to have been a minister to Thirumalai Nāyak.

Kumaraguru

Kumaragurupara was born of Saiva Vellala family near Srivaikuntam in Trinelvei District. He is said to have been born dumb and till his fifth year could not speak a word. As a result of ardent prayers to Lord Subrahmanya of Thiruchendur, he gained his speech and began composing excellent poems in Tamil. When he visited Madurai, Kumaraguru composed, Minakshi Amman Pillaittamil, at the request of Thirumalai Nāyak. Pillaittamil is a type of composition in Tamil in which the hero or the heroine of the poem is conceived of as a child and all the exploits are attributed to the child. Ten stages of childhood are praised, generally, in this type of composition. Minakshi-Amman Pillaittamil, is one of the finest Pillaittamil in Tamil literature in which Goddess Minakshi is praised as a girl child sporting in the universe, bestowing grace on the devotees. It is said that Kumaragurupara, composed the poem, being seated in six pillar-ed mandapa of the Minakshi shrine, in the presense of Thirumalai Nāyak. As he was singing the Muthupparuvam (the stage of Pearl) Goddess Minakshi assumed the form of a young girl, came running to him from the sanctum, sat on his lap, presented him with her pearl-necklace and disappeared. This episode is still popularly cherished by millions of devotees.

The story must be traced directly to the Sakta cult, wherein it is believed that Sakti will manifest herself in whatever form she is adored by the devotee. Obviously she appeared before Kumaraguru as a girl-child as she was praised as Balā Tripurasundari by him in this Pillaittamil work. This work is a full Sakta work and reflects the Sakta traditions. The Goddess is praised as Abhiramavalli, Kalyana Saundari, and Abhishekavalli weilding sugarcane bow (Rajarajesvari) (75). She is also said to have given birth to the universe, the mother of Akhilanda (28). That she is adored by Tantrik followers is also alluded to wherein they are trying to reach her grace in the mahakasa at the dvadasanta (76). As it is a 17th century work it reflects all Sakta tradition and it is needless to go into all the details. It is just of interest to mention that Kumaraguru visited Kasi and established a mutt there. Besides Minakshi Amman Pillaittamil, Kumaraguru has sung Sakala Kalavallimalai on Goddess Sarasvati and hymns in praise of God Subrahmanya and other deities. Three other poems ascribed to him traditionally also deserve special mention. They are Minakshi Amman Kuram, Minakshi Amman Irattaimanimalai, and Sivakami Ammai Irattaimanimalai. The learned Tamil scholar U.V. Swaminatha Iyer however considers these three were not the works of Kumaragurupara. The first two are in praise of Goddess Minakshi of Maduari, and the last one on Goddess Sivakami of Chidambaram. However the colophon to Minakshi Amman Maram, praises Thirumalaibhupati, the ruler of Maduari. The tradition seems to have preserved the historicity and these three poems were also by Kumaragurupara. It is necessary to mention that Kumaraguru was not a Sakta. He has sung the praises of Subrahmanya and Siva besides the Devi. It only reflects the religious tolerance of the people of the age.

Nilakanta Dikshita

Almost the same must be said of Nilakanta Dikshita who was the other great composer of the period. While Kumaraguru excelled in Tamil composition, he was a follower of Srikanta Sambhu's Sivadvaita. He belonged to the famous Sanskrit composer Appayya Dikshita's sisters family. Nilakanta excelled in the alankara known as Vakrokti, Nilakantasya Vakrokti. Nilakanta's one of the finest poems is the Anandasagarasthava on Goddess Minakshi, Nilakanta refers to the Goddess as Minakshi and Malayadhvaja Pāndya Kanyā. Obviously the term Minakshi is a sanskritisation of the Tamil word Ankayarkkanni. It is with the advent of Nilakanta Dikshita in 17th century A.D. the term Minakshi gained greater currency for the Goddess of Madurai. Among his numerous other works, Nilakanta has a hymn on Candi, called Caṇḍīrahasya, consisting of 36 verses.

Popularity of Goddess Minakshi

The general and gradual popularity being gained by the Devi cult, the great contribution of Thirumalai Nayak and the literary pourings of these two great poets, one in Tamil and the other in Sanskrit, and the continuance of the Hindu Nayak Kingdom in Madurai till the middle of 18th century, has made the cult of Meenakshi so popular in the Southern part of Tamilnad.

In the great temple of Madurai, Sakti images are found in considerable number and deserve mention. One significant aspect is the absense of Durga images prominently. The Kālī images predominate, especially in relation to the dancing form of Siva, often in ūrdhva tāṇḍava pose. As mentioned earlier, both the Vimanas of Lord Sundaresvara and Goddess Minakshi were built by Visvanatha Nayak in the middle of the 16th century. In the Vimana of the Goddess the main devakoshtas carry Icca Sakti, Kriya Sakti and Jnana Sakti, all the three being shown standing, two armed, holding a flower in the right arm and keeping the left in hanging position. It is also interesting to mention that the main image of Minakshi is also in standing form with two arms. There is a group of Saptamatas in this temple, which are the earliest sculptures to have survived. They are to be assigned to 8th century A.D. and are the finest representations of Pāndya art. The group is not complete. The sculptures are said to have been elsewhere and brought to the temple with in the living memory.

In front of the Kambattadi mandapa, in the Sundaresvara temple, Madurai, are four remarkable sculptures that deserve special mention. They are over seven feet in height with multiple arms and are known for their powerful delineation. Two of them are now called Virabhadra images, one Agni Virabhadra and the other Aghora Virabhadra. Of the other two, one represents Siva dancing the ūrdhava tāṇḍava and the other Kālī.

Besides these four remarkable sculptures, there are various representations of Siva, shown around the dhvaja sthamba. These are clearly intended to portray all the known iconographic forms of Siva under one roof. The sculptures though interesting from the iconographic point of view, lack artistic expressions and are generally dull except perhaps the Kalyanasundara group. Flanking the entrance to the Sundaresvara shrine, are two interesting iconographic representations. On to the right of the entrance, is Sadasivamurti with his consort and the one of the left represents a Goddess now adored as Gayatri devi.

The iconographic representations of Siva around the dwajasthamba were installed by Sri Nagappayya of Vainagāram family of the Nattukkottai Nagarattas Community about 100 years ago (1877). I think the tradition is right and the sculptures may be assigned to 18th century. But the four remarkable sculptures representing Ūrdhva tādava, Kālī and Virabhadras, are of 16th century. In one of the pillars there is an inscription recording the construction of the mandapa by Virappa nayaka, the son Visvanatha Krishnappa nayaka in the saka era 1505 (1583 A.D.). It is evident that the four remarkable sculptures belong to this mandapa and are fine examples of 16th century handiwork.

Agni Virabhadra

This fine image of the God is shown with a Jvālāmakuta and in the centre is shown a prominent skull. The protruding teeth and prominent moustache, heighten the terrific nature of the scene. The kundalas in the ears are formed with coiling snakes. Behind the jaṭāmakuta a snake move around. The Lord is eight armed piercing with the sūla, the dying Asura the right arms hold, sūla, damaruka, sword, and a human figure probably kamkāla. The left arms carry kapāla, shield and bell and the fourth left arm holds the handle of the sūla. Around the lower right arm is a serpent. Snakes are also seen as anklets. A garland of bell worn around the neck extends upto the knee. High heeled sandals are worn in the feet. The left feet is pressing the dying asura, whose neck is pierced by the Sūla. Below this sculpture are shown, eight Bhairavas on this four faces of the pillar.

It is possible that this sculpture identified as Agni Virabhadra, on account of the jvāla-like head-dress probably represents Bhairava.

Aghora Virabhadra

This sculpture standing close to the Agni Virabhadra, wears Jaṭāmakuta and is endowed with 10 arms; the upper right arm draws the arrow. Other right arms hold parasu, sūla, damaruka and a long bladed sword, piercing the neck of the dying figure below the feet. The left arms hold bow, deer, a small ring in the pointed finger, ankusa and shield. The shield is highly ornate and bears a figure of Virabhadra, high sandals are worn on the feet. A two armed figure wearing a crown and carrying sword and shield is falling dead, pierced by the sword.

Below this sculpture is shown, a four armed Kālī, kicking a falling figure with her right leg and holding sūla and sword in the right arms and kapāla and shield in the left arms. It is a fine representation. To the right are shown one woman beating a gong and the other a portrait of a Naik king in adoration, probably representing Virappa Nāyak, the maker of the image.

Ūrdhva Tāndava

The Ūrdhva Tāndava Siva of this group is an imposing sculpture, with ten arms. The following emblems are seen in the right arms damaruka, parasu, arrow, sword, and sūla. The left arm holds fire, deer, bow, shield and bell. The lifted right leg reaches the face band. The left leg is planted on the back of the dwarf, musalaka, who holds a sword and shield. To the left of Siva is shown Nandi seated, with bovine head and four arms. The upper right arms are held above the head in anjali and the lower ones are playing on kudamuza. To the right of Siva is shown the skeletal figure of Karaikkal pey the woman saint playing cymbals.

Immediately below is shown Narada. On the left face of the pillar is Vishnu, four armed, playing on a drum called Idakkai. To his left is shown a bearded sage. On the right face of the pillar is shown the four headed Brahma, playing cymbals.

The representation of this Ūrdhva tāndava, corresponds to the description, given in Tamil poems like the Kallādam.

Bhadra Kāli

This Kāli is greatly venerated by the local people. She has urdhvakesa, and is 8 armed, holding prayogasūla, in right arm. The emblem in the second right arm is broken. The third arm holds a weapon made of flowers. The Devi has placed her left leg on the lifted palm of a gana. On the left face of the pillar, is a human figure, playing a maddala. On the right face of the pillar is Kuli, holding sword and shield.

Pudumandapa-Dancing Siva

The representation of Ūrdhva Tāndava Siva and Kāli, have assumed great significance during the Nayak period. A some what similar representation, is now to be seen in the Pudumandapa, erected in 17th century by Thirumalai Nāyak. At the western end of the mandapa are the sculptures of Ūrdhva Tāndava Siva, and Kāli. Siva with his leg lifted above the facial band, is shown with ten arms; holds damaruka, parasu, sword, sūla and abhaya mudra in the right arms; fire, deer, shield, vrshadvaja and gajahasta in the left arms. The vrsha, held on a long shaft is reminiscent of the dancing Siva found in the Thirupparankunram, assignable to 8th century A.D. Below the planted leg is the dwarf holding a snake. To the right of the feet of Siva is Karaikkal ammai, and to the left is a four-armed figure playing kudamuza. Unlike the figure described in the previous Ūrdhva Tāndava form, where Nandi with a bovine head is shown playing kudamuzā, here the figure is shown with human face. Nandisa is shown playing maddala below. He is four armed, holding deer and axe in the upper arms and playing maddala with the lower arms. On either side are shown ganas playing conch.

On the right face of the pillar is shown Vishnu, four armed, wielding cakra, sankha, the drum Idakkai and beating stick. Below Vishnu are shown Tumburu and Narada, carrying Vinas. Behind them is shown the ruler Thirumalai Nāyak standing in adoration with his consort.

On the left face of the rock is the four armed Brahma, with akshamāla and kamandalu in the upper arms, and playing cymbals with the lower arms. Below Brahma are shown sages in anjali pose. Behind Brahma are shown two portraits of women among whom the first has manly head-dress and lower garment.

Kālī

Facing Siva on the other side is shown Kālī, with ūrdhvakesa, she has eight arms. In the right arms are prayogasūla, arrow, cakra and sword. While in the left are bow, pasa, shield and kapāla. A female attendant supports the left leg of the devi. Further below are shown another female attendant holding sūla and agni. On the left face of the pillar, is shown a female playing maddala and on the right face is a big Kūli carrying sword and shield. A female figure is shown offering incense.

In both the Kālī figures now discussed, the Devi is shown in dancing pose, wielding her usual weapons, and not as a vanquished by the great dancer. In scenes where Devi is shown as a vanquished Goddess, she is shown clasping her lower arms. We may hold that she is not only a witness but also a partaker in the cosmic dance. We have seen that Kālī is shown dancing with Siva even in the Ananda Tandava form as seen in the Gangaikonda Cholapuram sculpture. We have also noticed in the panel of Catura Tandava Siva at Thirupparankunram assignable to 8th century A.D. Kālī is shown dancing with Siva.

Mention has been mentioned earlier that competition between Siva and Kālī and the final victory of Siva one referred to in Kallādam. The work is assignable to 11th century A.D. Though this is referred to, in this mediæval text, we may conclude that this is not the original concept, and was a later development. The ruler shown adoring Siva's dance, however, points to the superiority of Siva's dance which received veneration.

Bhairavi

The mandapa before the astha sakti mandapa carries sculptures, one representing Bhairavi and the other a Kirāta. The Bhairavi is on the southern side. She is two armed holding sūla in the right arm and kapāla in the left arm. The hair is tied as a knot to the side. Vibhūti is seen on the forehead. A point of interest is the presense of five hooded Cobra over the head of the Goddess. This is an important iconographic feature. In later temples, which are now worshipped as Māri Amman, Mundakanni Amman, Ankālamman or Pachaiyamman, we find in variably the presence of the five hooded cobra. What is the meaning of this association? While discussing Takkayagapparanī we have mentioned that Kālī is endowed with many aspects of Vishnu and one such association is Vishnu's serpent Ananta, acting as the seat of the Devi. A Chola sculpture now preserved in the Siva temple at Thirukkattuppalli, shows the Devi seated under a single hooded cobra. The sculpture is assignable to 10th century A.D. We have also shown the association serpents legend with Devi, mentioned in Periyapurānam, a 12th century work.

Thus the association of serpent hood over the head of Devi could be traced back to 10th century A.D. It is significant to see that the theme has continued to be popular in 17th century A.D.

Facing this Bhairavi is a sculpture of a hunter of the other pillar. What is the significance of this Kirāta sculpture is not clear for the present. The Kirāta is two armed holding a parrot in the left arm, and Vismaya in the right arm. By the side of the feet is shown a monkey.

These sculptures and the mandapa are to be assigned to the 17th century A.D. and were either constructed by Thirumalai Nāyak himself or by an immediate predecessor of his.

Vasantarāya mandapa

We may also mention the Vasantaraya mandapa in front of the Siva shrine and adjoining the thousand pillared hall. The pillared hall has to be assigned to late 16th century and must have come into existence sometime after the thousand pillared hall. In this Vasantaraya mandapa, at the eastern end are four figure sculptures, each being about five feet in height. On the southern side of the passage, are Virabhadra and Kālī; Kālī wears kiritamakuta which has flames issuing from its sides. Above the head is shown the five hooded serpent. The Devi is eight armed holding sword, discus, trident and tādanamudra; the left arms hold shield sankha, pāsa and kapāla. The third eye is present in the forehead. The rounded eyeballs and protruding teeth heighten the destructive aspect of the Goddess. But this is one of the finest sculpture in the Madurai temple.

To the north of it are sculptures representing a hunter and Bhairava. The Bhairava may be considered the counterpart of the Goddess. He wears jatamakuta, and has six arms, sūla, parasu and sword while the left has deer, shield and kapala. This figure may be called Mahākala and the corresponding figure as Mahākālī.

Ashtasakti mandapa

At the eastern end of the temple complex, in front of the Meenakshi shrine, is the entrance mandapa, which is now called Ashtasakti mandapa, on account of the presence of eight Sakti sculptures. It is seen that this mandapa was built by one of the queens of Thirumalai Nāyak in 17th century. The Portraits of Thirumalai Nāyak and his queens and other nobles are to be seen in the pillars at the back. The intention of the builder is clearly to make this the entrance to the Meenakshi shrine. At a later period, in the early 18th century, another mandapa was erected further east leaving a roadway in between. This, now called Nagara mandapa, was erected by Queen Mangammal.

It is the Ashta Sakti mandapa that is of interest to us. At the front are shown dvārapalikas, one of either side of the entrance and chouri bearers at the rear. At the entrance to the inner mandapa are Ganesa and Subrahmanya. But it is flanking the entrance we notice the Ashta saktis. There are altogether eight images of Goddess, all of them standing and identical, except for variations in emblems and head gear. The series begin from the inner end of the northern side. The following are the deities represented—Manonmani, Mahesvari, Syāmala, Yagnarūpini, Kaumāri, Raudri, Vaishnavi and Mahālakshmi.

Manonmani : Wears jaṭāmakuta; four armed, the upper arms hold lotuses; the lower right arm is in Chin mudra and holds an akṣhamāla between the figures. In the left arm she holds a flower bunch; a parrot is seen pecking flowers.

Maheśvari : Wears kirita makuta; four armed, ankusa, pasa, abhaya and varada being the emblems.

Syāmala : Wears kirita makuta; four armed and holds lotus and lilly in the upper arms and abhaya and varada in the lower arms.

Yagnarūpini: Wears jaṭāmakuta; holds sruk and sruva in the upper arms and abhaya and varada in the lower arms.

Kaumāri : Wears kirita; has four arms holding Sakti, Vajra, abhaya and varada in the arms.

Raudri : Wears jaṭāmakuta, ball-like eyes and protruding teeth show her raudra aspect; holds damaruka, serpent, sūla and kapāla.

Valshnavi : Wears kirita; holds sankha, cakra, abhaya and varada but what is of interest is the presense of vibhuti pundra on the forehead.

Mahālakshmi : Wears kirita and holds abhaya and varada in the lower arms while the upper ones bear lotuses.

The representation of this Ashta Saktis in this temple in 17th century is interesting.

THE KAMAKKOTTAM CULT

A special character of the Siva temples of Tamilnad is the existence of a separate shrine to Goddess within the Siva temple complex. These shrines are now popularly called Amman shrines and have assumed equal importance as the main sanctums of Siva. In some temples, the devotees now believe that they should first visit the Amman shrine before going to the Siva shrine. From the end of 11th century A.D., these Amman shrines have assumed significance and were invariably called Kāmakkoṭṭam in all the temples and the Amman was called Kāmakkoṭṭam Uḍaiya Nācchiyūr. The importance attached to the Amman shrines is neither noticed in Kerala nor in Andhra-Karnāṭaka regions. It has become specially Tamil in character and therefore needs special study.

One of the most important temples now adored as Kāmakkoṭṭam is the present Kāmākshi temple of Kanchi. The earliest reference to Kāmākshi occurs in the hymns of the Saivite saint Appar. I have discussed elsewhere the date of the Saivite saints and assigned Appar to the beginning of 7th century A.D. One of Appar's hymns addressed to the presiding deity of Thiruvadigai, is taken to allude to Pārvati embracing Siva at Kanchi, when the river Kampa overflowed. K.R. Venkataraman holds that the episode referred to in Appar's hymn relates to Kanchi. But it is stretching the meaning of the word too far. The more appropriate meaning is that Lord Siva bears on his chest the mark left by Devi in her amorous sports. The selection of the word Kāmakkoṭi in relation to amorous sports is significant as it is to heighten the poetic appeal (Kāma standing here for sexual desires). It is also significant in another way. The words amar porudu kolamkoṇḍa used are carefully chosen which means Uma was sportively resisting and Siva exercised sufficient force to embrace her. In the story of Kanchi, this amorous force on the part of Siva has no place. Uma embraced Siva out of fear and not in amorous sport. The verse has no allusion to the Kanchi episode either outwardly or even subtly. In the present case the Goddess at Thiruvadigai is referred to as Kāmakkoṭi by Appar.

It must be remembered that in the mediaeval chola inscriptions the Goddess in Siva temples are referred to generally as Kāmakōṭi. Hence the suggestion that Kāmakōṭṭam-Lalita cult originated from Kanchi and spread to other places of Tamilnadu, is unacceptable. Appar the earliest to refer to Kāmakōṭi speaks of her in association with Thiruvadigai. Jñānasambandar, an younger contemporary of Appar also refers to Kāmakōṭi in association with a Irumbulai in Tanjore district.

It only suggests that by the beginning of the 7th century the term Kāmakkoṭi applied to the consort of Siva was well-known. How far earlier this concept developed we do not know.

We have seen that in the Kailasanatha temple of Kanchi, a separate shrine for the Goddess was provided and that it was as important as the other Parivāra shrines like Durga, Ganesa, Jyeshtha etc. However the sub shrines dedicated to Brahma and Vishnu are bigger than the Ambika shrine.

The Devi shrines in Siva temples being called Kāmakōṭṭam Uḍaiya Nāchiyār is not confined to any particular region. It is found in all the districts of Tamilnadu, from Chingleput in the north to Thirunelveli in the south, where inscriptions are found referring to the Devi shrines as Kāmakōṭṭamuḍaiya Nāchiyār shrines. Beginning from 11th, to the end of 16th century, we find the name Kāmakōṭṭamuḍaiya Nācchi occurring for Goddess in various temples. Nor such references restricted to any particular dynasty. References occur in inscriptions of Chola, Pandya, Sambuvaraya and Vijayanagar rulers. But soon the Goddess of each temple was given a separate name and this in most cases, was based, on a significant name found in the Devaram hymns of that particular temple. These were also sanskritised which are now popular among the devotees, the most famous being Ankayal Kaṇṇi for Meenākshi of Madurai.

It is of interest to mention that in the worship of images, depending upon the approach of the devotee, different forms are prescribed. In the Vaishnava āgamic texts the deities are classified as Yoga, Bhoga, Vira and Ābhicharika forms are prescribed for worship. In Saivite concepts also we know that some of the temples were called Virasthānas. We have shown, that Vāma mārgins were there in Tamilnadu. Sekkilār in his Periyapurānam refers to a Yoga pīṭha and a Bhōga pīṭha that were in existence in Kanchi. The Devi residing in the yoga pīṭha is said to be surrounded by Yoginis and probably this refers to a Durga temple. The reference to Bhōga pīṭha is to the temple of Kūmākshi when a separate shrine was established for the Goddess as consort of Siva, then it obviously stood as a Bhoga pitha, Bhōgasthāna or Bhogasakti. That is the reason why it was probably called Kāmakkōṭṭam.

It may also be mentioned that in most of the Siva temples a bronze image of Devi is placed in the sanctum where the Siva linga is worshipped. Such images are called Bhōgasakti or Bhōgesvari. It is believed that Siva should never be without this Bhōga Sakti. The prayers of the devotee to bestow happy worldly life on him, is addressed to Siva and Devi as universal parents. We have also seen that the Sakti of Siva is installed in the Yōnīpīṭha during the consecration ceremony. When such is the case why, there arose a separate shrine for Devi with in the Siva temple complex. We may suggest the following for such a development. Just as Durga, or Kāli was consecrated for bestowing victory or Yoga, separate temples were erected for Devi for the fulfilment of Bhoga.

The references to Kāmakkōṭṭam of Kanchi by Saint Sundaramurti in 8th century was probably to such a separate temple dedicated to Bhōgadevi. Since the Devi was always recognised as the consort of Siva, early literature spoke of her in association with the famous Siva temple of the village, like the Ekāmbaranātha at Kanchi, though both the temples stood in different parts of the city, separated by considerable distance. This continued to be the norm till the end of 11th century. The great temples of Kanchi, Tanjore, Gangaikondacholapuram, Darasuram and even Tribhuvanam temples were built by the chola rulers probably as Vīrasthānas dedicated to Siva. That is perhaps the reason why no separate Devi shrine was erected within the temple complex.

However, when new shrines were erected separately for Devi from 12th century A.D., it was built in the proximity of the Siva temple, though still falling outside the enclosures. The Amman shrine in Chidambaram temple erected in the reign of Kulottunga I, was outside the enclosure of the Siva temple. It was towards the end of Kulottunga's reign, a separate enclosure and an entrance tower were built separately for the Devi. In later times perhaps in 13th century, another enclosure including the Amman shrine was built integrating it with the main lay out. In the famous Meenakshi temple at Madurai, the Amman shrine was separate which was encased within the common enclosure only 16-17th century. However a separate shrine to the Goddess was built in the great temple of Tanjore, within the main prakara in the 13th century A.D. by a certain Pandya ruler whose title alone has survived.

We may not be wrong when we say that Kāmakkōṭṭams were originally independent Sakti shrines dedicated to the Goddess in her benign aspect as Bhōgesvari in Pallava and Early chola period, which were integrated into the Siva shrine in 12-13th century A.D., when the Saivite and Sakta philosophy developed closely influencing each other.

We must also mention that the development of Devi cult is not an isolated event. From the end of 8th century A.D., the Jains who were averse to feminine principles were greatly influenced by the Hindu movement and began worshipping Yakshi figures in great numbers. It would be appropriate to trace the popularity of Yakshi cult among the Jains to the Devi cult of the Hindu school than vice versa as suggested by K.R. Venkatraman.

In many famous temples such as Chidambaram, Madurai, Darasuram, Tribhuvanam, the shrine of the Goddess face the same direction as the main sanctum. However in the great temple of Tanjore, the shrine of the Goddess faces south. But in all cases the Devi shrines were located to the north of the sanctum.

KAMAKSHI TEMPLE OF KANCHI

In 7th cent. A.D.

The earliest reference to Kamakshi of Kanchi as Kamakkotti occurs in the hymn of Thirujnana Sambandar. Sambandar refers to Siva remaining in union with Kamakoti of Kacci.

Kaccippoli Kāmakkoṣijudan Kūḍi Iccittu Irum Pūlai iḍam Koṇḍa Iṣan.

The word Kaccippoli Kāmakkoṣi means Kāmakkoṣi of Kacci. Thus this may be taken to be the earliest reference to Kāmākshi of Kanchi. In fact Sambandar refers in this verse to Siva of the village Irumpulai in Tanjore district as Irumpūlai iḍam koṇḍa Iṣan. In this case the reference would indicate that the Goddess of Irumpulai was also called Kāmakkoṣi which is not unlikely. We have shown earlier that Appar refers to the Goddess of Thiruvadigai as Kāmakodi. Appar and Sambandar were contemporaries and lived in the 7th century A.D.

In 8th cent. A.D.

The Saivite saint Sundaramurti who lived in 8th century makes a positive reference to the Kāmakkoṣṭam of Kanchipuram. He refers to Kacci mūdūr Kāmakkoṣṭam and says "when the Devi of Kāmakkoṣṭam is here why do you O Lord go about begging." We are therefore certain that by the 8th century A.D. a separate temple to Goddess Kāmākshi, was in existence at Kanchi in the Name of Kāmakkoṣṭam. I am of the opinion that the present Kāmākshi temple is in the same place where it was when Sundarar visited it in 8th century A.D., though the structures have undergone reconstruction.

Kāmākshi Vilāsa

There is a sthalapurāna for the Kāmākshi temple under the title Kāmākshi Vilāsa. It is said to be a part of Mārkaṇḍeya purāna and is in the form of a dialogue between Mārkaṇḍeya and a king, Suratha. This text gives puranic anecdotes connected with all the structures that are held in veneration in Kāmākshi temple today. Some of these structures are of very recent origin and we are therefore justified in holding this work as a late 19th century work. It is said to have been published for the first time in 1889 in telugu script by the Karvet nagar, ruler. In all probability this work was composed then.

There is no need to say that this work is found in none of the Mārkaṇḍeyapurāṇa text known to us. The stories enumerated in this text are fantastic and are mainly aimed at glorifying the Goddess Kāmākshi as the Supreme deity. It does not hesitate to create a situation in which Lord Siva is made to fight with Kāmākshi and be defeated by her. The kshetra itself is called Sivajit Kshētra. The text tries to localise the story of Bhaṇḍāsura vadha in this place. It also says that the mandapa in front of the sanctum, supported by twenty four pillars, is Gāyatri on a Mahābila i.e. great hole, where Kāmākshi as Kanya resided, did tapas and issuing forth from the hole, reduced the universe to ashes. She then created Brahma, Vishnu and Siva for the universal functioning. The present temple is said to be built over the remains of Bandāsura whose body was buried there. It also gives some stories for the installation of Yantra. Sri K.R. Venkataraman in his studies in this temple tries to cull out some history from this concocted text to strengthen his stand. On our part we dismiss this text as purely useless for our study. A few well-known concepts of the Sakta tradition have been taken and rustic stories woven around them. We will examine these few concepts and show their integration into this text.

That Devi did tapas to attain Siva is well-known. The association of Mahābila i.e. the great hole and the Devi issuing forth from it and burning the universe to ashes and reentering the hole, arise out of the serpent cult. The identification of serpent cult with the Devi cult seem to be very ancient and all-Indian in character. How far ancient is this it is difficult to say. The cult of Mānasā in eastern India, arise out of this identification. It is probably to be traced to the worship of Nagas in the Pre-Christian era. The Upanishadic concepts that the Supreme deity resides in Guha such as Guhām praviśṭau Parame Parārdhe, also directly influenced these tales.

That the mandapa represents Gāyatri is also a similar tale. Since there are twenty four pillars in the mandapa the term Gāyatri could have been originally used symbolically, for which a story has now been invented. However the association of the Devi, at Kanchi with serpent hole is earlier to 12th century. Sekkilar mentions this in his Periyapurāṇam but in a different way. She is said to have been requested by the serpent king, Padmanāga, to reside in his bila and do tapas. This she accepted.

The fulfilment of sexual desires both in the physical sense and esoteric sense are well-known concepts of the Sakta tradition. The sthalapurāṇa calls the Devi as Kāmaplta, Kāmavardhani, and Srngārdmohini. She is said to have assumed the form, Manmatha maṇḍala which shows the fuller expression of Sakta tradition. The text also states that the worship in the temple was based on Rudrayāmala, a tantric text.

Sri K.R. Venkataraman, states that "the Devi exhorted Brahma to install the Devi images in all the Siva temples" which he considers significant. This he cites to show hat Devi images were not in Siva temples originally and they were installed by Brahma newly. K.R. Venkatraman's citations are partial. The Āmākṣī vilāsa clearly says, the Devi caused the Devi images in all the temples to disappear so that Siva will be afflicted with Kāma and come to her. It is after this episode that Brahma was asked to reinstall the Gauri images in all the temples. So the Gauri images were there already and Brahma only reinstalled them. We are only citing this to show it would be useless to rely on this text to get any historical data.

Tripura

In the Airavatesvara temple (Rājarājesvara temple) at Darasuram, built by Rājarāja Chola II, in the 12th century A.D. there is an interesting figure of what looks like Ardhanārī. The right half the figure is male and the left is female. It has three heads, adorned with karandamakūṣas. Behind the heads, is shown a circular disc. The third eye is visibly shown in the forehead. The deity is endowed with eight arms, holding akṣhamāla, kadga, kaṭvāṅga and a lotus flower in the right arms and pāsa, abhaya, daṇḍa and kapāla in the left arms. The lower garment in the left is shown upto the ankle while that on the right is upto the middle of the thigh. The figure has many peculiar features. In both the ears, only makarakundalas are seen whereas in Ardhanari forms, the right ear will have makarakundala and the left a patrakuṇḍala. The head dress in all the three heads represent karandamakūṣa, which emphasises that this whole is a feminine deity. In Ardhanari images, the right side of the head dress would be jaṭamakuta, and the left karandamakūṣa. Nūpurās are shown in both the legs which again shows that the deity is a female. The deity also holds in the main right arm, a lotus, which is characteristic of a female deity and yet it is an ardhanārī form and as such it is necessary to state what it represents. The whole represents Devi as Parāsakti-Tripurā (Pl. 98) to whom Siva is an anga, a part. The word, kaṭvāṅga, daṇḍa, pāsa and kapāla, lay emphasis on Tripura Bhairavi aspect of the Devi. The akṣhamāla symbolises Jñāna. The three heads will show the Devis embodiment as Durgā, Lakshmi and Saraswati or Iccā Sakti, Kriyā Sakti and Jñāna Sakti.

The Takkayāgapparaṇi, a Tamil work by Oṭṭakkūttan is a work composed at the time when the temple at Darasuram was built by Rājarāja II. There are strong evidences to suggest that Oṭṭakkūttan composed his work after seeing the temple and its sculptures. There are two verses in Takkayāgapparaṇi that are of interest in respect of the image under discussion. The Devi is praised, in one of the verses (V 109), to whom Siva is said to form a part. Devi is said to delight in having Siva as her part. She is also extolled (in V 431) as Tripurā Bhairavi. The sculpture at the Darasuram temple is unique and represents Tripurā.

Devi as Mohini

While discussing Takkayāgapparaṇi, we have mentioned that Sakti is endowed with most of the aspects of Vishnu. There is an interesting sculpture in a niche of the front mandapa in the Darasuram temple, representing a Goddess. The Devi is shown standing with two arms, holding a lotus in her right arm and amirta kalasa in the left. The moving limbs, the most charming face and the captivating smile, makes it the most elegant sculpture that one could see in the Darasuram temple. The sculpture has been identified as Annapūrṇa by many scholars, but it is not a representation of Annapūrṇa who should be shown with annapātra in the left and a spoon in the right. The Goddess represented here is Devi as Mohini who holds Amirta Kalasa from which she distributed ambrosia to the Devas (Pl. 99). A verse (107) in Takkayāgapparanī extols Devi as Mohini who distributed Amirtapāna to the Devas.

Amarar vālvu valvāga Avunar valvu palaga Arulum Mohini Āhi Amudapānam tvaie.

This sculpture is a representation of Sakti as Mohini who is also called Vishnu māyā.

Sakti in Sati Stones

When a woman committed Sati, either by burning herself to death in the funeral pyre of her husband or burying herself with the body of her husband, she was adored and honoured by erecting Sati stones, also called Masati-stones. Such a custom seems to have gained momentum in the mediaeval period and are seen in large numbers in Karnataka region. This custom was also in Vogue in Tamilnadu from the Sangam period. However Sati stones are very rarely met with in Tamilnadu. So far only two inscribed stones have come to light both coming from the regions contiguous with Karnataka region.

However a few Pallava panels, recently brought to light, can now definitely be identified as Sati stones. The principal distinguishing feature in these panels, is the representation of two arms issuing from a shaft (Pls. 101 & 102). In well-known inscribed Sati stones of mediaeval period, one or two arms are shown issuing from a shafts. The representation of arms, issuing from a shaft is a common motif in Sati stones.

Another distinguishing feature is the representation of two apsaras holding flower or chouri in their arm, flanking a pair of human beings shown with their arms in anjali pose. The human pair thus standing in between represent the dead husband and the wife who committed Sati. When a hero dies he is said to ascend heaven in a divine chariot accompanied by apsaras. In hundreds of hero-stones that have come to light, the representations of hero, being accompanied by the apsaras, either holding flowers or chouri are seen. In the panel under discussion the apsaras flanking the human pair, signify the couple being accompanied to the devaloka.

In such panels, a number of deities are represented (either shown seated or standing) besides the arms and human figures. In general all the deities are shown seated on a common pedestal and are shown in the following order. First is shown Brahma; then is Siva in the form of linga. To his left is shown invariable Pārvati seated. Then Subrahmanya and Narasimha are represented. In some panels Narasimha is followed by Sri in the form of Srivatsa. There are panels in which Ganesa and Jyeshthā are also shown. A panel from Peddamuḍiyam, now preserved in the Madras Museum shows Durga as Mahishāsuramardini in addition to the other deities.

The representation of various Gods in these panels signifies the attainment devaloka by the dead pair. They had achieved the unique distinction of reaching not only heaven but also standing face to face with all the Gods. The representation of both Saivite and Vaishnavite deities in the same panels, shows the sectarian bias has not yet emerged strongly as it did in late mediaeval periods. Special mention must be made of the portrayal of Sakti invariably with Sivalinga and in many cases, Sridevi with Narasimha. Both the principal Gods are shown with their consorts giving audience to the couple who have arrived from manushyaloka. This emphasises the importance given to the feminine principle, in these Sati stones. It is of interest to mention that many such women who committed Sati were deified and often identified with Durga or Kālī in later periods. Such Sati stones have come to light from Munnur, Kanchipuram, Manimangalam, Ukkal, Utteramerur, Brahmadesam and Tenneri, all in the Pallava territory.

VIII

SAKTI WORSHIP AS GLEANED FROM EPIGRAPHS

So far as Tamilnadu is concerned, written documents in the form of lithic records begin to appear from the 2nd Century B.C. Most of the epigraphs ranging from 2nd Century B.C. to 2nd Century A.D., are associated with Jaina abodes, referring to the name of the monks or the donors of the abodes.

From the reign of the great Pallava ruler Mahendravarman (600 A.D.), the epigraphs begin to make pointed reference to Sakti, in her various manifestations. Mahendra's inscription at the upper rock cut cave, refers to the constant company of Umā with Siva, in a dramatic form.

कावीरी नयनाभिराम सलिला आराममालाधरा
देवो बीक्ष्य नदीप्रियः प्रियतमां सप्येषरज्येत् इति
साधक्या गिरिकन्धका पितृकुलं हित्वैव मन्ये गिरी
नित्यं तिष्ठति पल्लवस्य दमिता एतां सुवाणा नदी

The Kuram grant of Paramesvara Pallava, begins with salutations to Siva as Visvamurti who is evidently the five faced Sadasiva.

पञ्चाक्षः त्रिसदृशं प्रति भव नयनः
चन्द्रमौलिः त्रिसूती
भीम व्यालोपवीति दक्षभुजपरिचः
तत्त्वमात्रस्य मूर्तिः
दिव्योऽवेक्ष्यः मुकुन्द प्रभृतिभिः
सृष्टिकृत् मन्त्रसिद्धः
कर्ता नो मूर्तिविद्या विहित परमः
त्रायतां विम्बमूर्तिः

Siva bestows Sakti, who is responsible for Kriyasadhana on devotees says the next verse in the same grant.

कार्यंभूह कला कमल परम ध्योमामृत ज्योतिषः
विद्वन् मानस चन्द्रकान्त पतितः मूर्च्छन्ति यस्यांसवः
मूलानां हृदयेषु चानयति यः सक्तिं क्रिया साधनीं
मय्यात्मा परमेश्वरः स जयति त्रैलोक्यब्रह्मामनिः

Siva, seated on top of Sumeru mountain as a great Yogin with Umā is mentioned in the benedictory verse of the Udayendram copper plate grant of Nandivarman.

सुमेरु गिरि मूर्धनि प्रवरजोव ब्रह्मासनं
जगज्जय विभूतये रविशशाङ्क नैत्रद्वयम्
उमासहितम् आदरात् उदयचन्द्र तदमीश्वरं
सदाशिवं ग्रहं नमामि शिरसा ब्रह्माधारिणम्

The Kasakkudi plates (8th Century) of Nandivarman Pallava include in the benedictory verses, adoration of Lakshmi and Durga. Durga is called Arya, Bhagavati and Vishnu's sister.

दृष्ट्वा ललाटे नयनं त्रियेव कामो न दामीश्वर इत्युपास्ते
विष्णोः स्वसा सा
भगवत्यसकम्पी
आर्या कदापीं क्षिपुतात् जनेन ।

The other point of interest in this verse is, that the Devi is said to be worshipped by Kama. The Lalita Sahasranama, calls Devi as Kamapujita. The concept was popular in the Tamil land even in 8th Century is attested by this grant.

Rajasimha's inscription at Mamallapuram and Saluvankuppam refer to the Somaskanda aspect.

इह गिरित्तम्या शुद्ध मण सहितः
नियतं कृत रक्तिः जवतु पशुपतिः

Mention has been made earlier of the installation of the image of Goddess Nisumbasudani at Tanjore by Vijayalaya around 850 A.D.

ततः प्रतिष्ठाप्य निशुम्भसूदनीं
सुगामुरैः अश्विनत पादपङ्कजाम्

The adoration of Devi as the Supreme Goddess, whose blessings were sought for even the mighty emperors, for their conquests, and well beings is pointed by this inscription. The installation of Mahakalattu Bhatari (obviously Chandika) at Nemam in Tanjore District, by the Muttaraiya Chieftain Perumbidugu Muttaraiya in the first half of 9th Century is recorded in a pillar inscription now in Sendalai. That the Pallava ruler Tillarierinda Nandi, and the Pandya ruler Marān Sadaiyan visited this temple of Bhatari personally and gifted gold and wealth speak of the popularity of the Devi cult in the 9th Century A.D.

Recently an inscription has been exposed on a pillar behind the shrine of the Goddess in the northern part of the prakara of the great temple of Tanjore. The inscription is dated in the reign of Rajaraja Chola I and refers to the endowment for the Goddess Umaparamesvari, in prakara of the temple. The pillar on which the inscription is found, is in front of a small shrine which obviously enshrined the Goddess. The inscription for the first time shows that even from the time of Rajaraja, a separate shrine for the Goddess were built in the Siva Temples. However, from the end of the 11th Century, from the reign of Kulottunga Chola I, such temples assumed very great importance and were called Kamakottam Udaiyanachiyar. Several inscriptions refer to such shrines in the Siva temples. A few select inscriptions on such Devi shrines are appended at the end. References to Sakti are innumerable in mediaeval and late mediaeval literature, which would require an exhaustive treatise. I am therefore appending a few inscriptions for the convenience of the readers.

SELECT INSCRIPTIONS ON KAMAKKOTTAM

1. An inscription in Tamil in the Tirukkalukkunram Udaiyar temple Tirukkalukkunram, Chingleput district dated in the 20th year of Chola king Tribhuvanachakravartin Kulothunga chola deva records a gift of sheep for a perpetual lamp to the Goddess Tirukkamakotta-Nachchiyar (A.R.E. 136/1932-33).
2. An inscription in Tamil in the Adavallar temple dated 23rd year in the reign of the Chola king Tribhuvanavartin Konerinmai Kondan records a gift of land made tax free for the expenses to the shrine Tirukkamakotta-Mudalya-Periya Nachchiyar (A.R.E. 89/1919).
3. An inscription in Tamil in the Tirupperumanamudaiyar temple dated 32nd year in the reign of the Chola king Tribhuvanachakravartin Tribhuvana Vira deva, records a gift of land to the shrine of Tirukkamakotta mudalya Nachchiyar (A.R.E. 530/1919-21).
4. An inscription in Tamil in the Siva temple, Sirudavur, Chingleput Taluk, Chingleput District, dated 12th year Chittirai 26, in the reign of Sambuvaraya King Sakalalokachakravartin Rajanarayanan, records a remission of some specified taxes on two veli of devadana land belonging to the God and the Nachchiyar (A.R.E. 93/1933).
5. An inscription in Tamil in the Atmanayaki Amman temple Tirukkalakkudi dated in 14th year, of Pandya king Maravarman alias Tribuvanachakravartin Sundara Pandya deva records that at the instance of the king's nephew Kulasekhara deva, certain lands situated in Kumattakkudi, a village of Kana-nadu, were made tax free and given to the Goddess of Pidariyar Alagiya Nachchiyar. (A.R.E. of the A.A.S. Vol. VI 1916-18) (A.R.E. 61/1916-18).
6. An inscription in Tamil in the Minakshi Amman Temple, Kolinji Vadi, Dharapuram Coimbatore district, dated in the reign of the king Tribuvanachakravarti Konerinmai Kondan, records a gift of land to the Goddess Tirukkamakotta Nachchiyar (S.I.I. Vol. V 260).

7. An inscription in Tamil in the Nellaiappar temple Tirunelveli Taluk, Tirunelveli District dated 34th year in the reign of the Pandya king Sundara Pandya devar records a gift of tank for the irrigation purpose to the offering of the Goddess Nāchchiyār of Tirukkāmakottam (S.I.I. Vol. V, No. 408).

8. An inscription in Tamil in the Sokkanathasvamin temple Kolinjivadi, Coimbatore District dated 30th year and 51st day in the reign of the Chola king Tribuvanachakravartin, Konerinmai Kondan records a gift of land free of all taxes in Anukampalam alias Amarabhayankara to the Goddess Tirukkāmakottattu Nāchchiyār alias Alagiyasokkiyār (A.R.E. 155/1920).

9. An inscription in Tamil in the Sokkanathasvamin temple Kolinjivadi, dated 30th year and 56th day in the reign of the Chola king Tribuvana Chakravartin, Konerinmai Kondan records another gift of land to the same Goddess Tirukkāmakottattu-Nāchchiyār alias Alagiya Sokkiyār (A.R.E. 156/1920).

10. An inscription in Tamil in the Sokkanathasvamin Temple Kolinjavadi, Coimbatore District dated 29th year and 235th day in the reign of the Chola king, Tribuvana-Chakravartin, Konerinmai Kondan records a gift of land to the same Goddess Tirukkāmakottattu nāchchiyār alias Alagiyasokkiyar in the temple (A.R.E. 157/1920).

11. An inscription in Tamil in the Kailasanata Temple Tentiruppera, Tiruchendur Taluk, Tinneveli district dated 11th year in the reign of the Pandya king Jaṭavarman alias Tribuvana Kulasekara Dēva records some endowment by the king for the worship of Goddess Tirukkāmakottattu Āludaya Nāchchiyār (A.R.E. 286/1939-43).

12. An inscription in Tamil in the Kailasanatha temple Singikulam, Nanguneri Taluk, Tinneveli District dated 33rd year and 61st day in the reign of the Pandya king Maravarman alias Tribuvanachakravartin (Kula) Sekara Deva records an endowment made by the king of land to the Goddess Tirukkamakottamudaiya-Nachchiyar. (A.R.E. 262/1939-43).

13. An inscription in Tamil in the Govardhani Amman shrine in Subramanya Temple Tirupparankunram, Madura Taluk, Madura District dated 43rd year in the reign of the king Tribuvanachakravartin Konerinmai Kondan records a gift of land of the Tirukkamakottam (A.R.E. 387/1918).

14. An inscription in Tamil in the Govardhani Amman shrine in the Subramanya temple Thirupparankunram, Madurai Taluk, Madurai District dated 43rd year in the reign of the king records a similar grant of land to the same shrine (A.R.E. 338/1918).

15. An inscription in Tamil in the Govardhani Amman shrine, Subramanya temple, Tirupparankunram, Madurai Taluk, Madurai District dated 42nd year in the reign of the Pandya king Maravarman alias Tribuvanachakravartin Kulasekara deva records a gift of land of the Tirukkāmakottattu Āludaya Nāchchiyar (A.R.E. 339/1918).

16. An inscription in Tamil in the Nellaiappar temple, Tirunelveli Taluk, Tirunelveli District in the reign of the Kerala king, Sri Buthalaveeraramavarman records a gift of the land to the Goddess Nāchchiyār Tirukkāmakottattu Āludaiya Nachchiyar. (S.I.I. Vol. V 409).

17. An inscription in Tamil in the Nellaiyappar temple Tinneveli, Tinneveli Taluk, Tinneveli District dated in the reign of the Naick king, Srimath Viswanatha Krishnappa Naicker, records a gift of land to the Goddess Nachchiyar Tirukkamakkottattu Aludaiya Nachchiyar (S.I.I. Vol. V 410).

18. An inscription in Tamil in the Muruganatha temple Tirumuruganpundi, dated, 4th year in the reign of the Kongu Pandya king Jatavarman records that the paving of the floor of the ardhamandapa of the shrine of the Goddess Irugunannidai mangaiyār (A.R. of the AAS Vol. VI 1916-18).

19. An inscription in Tamil in the Sangamesvara Temple Vedavalli Amman shrine, Bhavani, dated Parthiva tai 20 records that the front ardhamandapa of the shrine of Pannarmoliyamman at Thiruvanikudal was the benefaction of Immadi Ketti-Mudaliyar and Sinnammal (A.R.E. 232/1950-51).

20. An inscription in Tamil in the Sangamesvara temple Bhavani dated Vikrama, Chittirai that Immadi-ketti Mudaliyar constructed a procession path round the shrine (tirunadai maligai), the front nriya mandapa and the Sikhara (Pinnacle) of God Nannavudaiyasvamin and also the central shrine the ardhamandapa and the mahā-mandapa of the Goddess Pannār (moli)-amman (A.R.E. 229/1950-51).

SELECT INSCRIPTIONS ON DURGA

1. An inscription in Tamil in the Selliyamman temple Kilachchur (Vellore Taluk) near Pallikonda dated in the reign of the Chola king Parthivendra varman records that Punkuran Uttamasivanathan, an officer of Sola Prithivigangaraiyar whose territory extended to Kallodu constructed (on behalf of his master) the Vimana of the Goddess Vadapalamandal (Durga) at Nandikampa Chaturvedimangalam in Pali-nadu a subdivision of Paduvur-Kottam (A.R.E. 23/1938-39).

2. An inscription in Tamil in the Ainjanjandi Durgaiyār of Kanchipuram dated 18th year of the Chola king Rajaraja records gift of 60 Kalanju of gold by the residents of Sirumanraiur, a devadana situated in Ambi-nadu in Eyyilkottam for burning four perpetual lamps in the name of the king in the temple of Ainjanjandi-Durgaiyār of Kanchipuram (A.R.E. 78/1919).

3. An inscription in Tamil in the Kachapisvara temple (on the eastern wall of the Durga shrine) big Conjeevaram, Chingleput district, dated in 3rd year of Parakesari-varman alias Rajendra chola deva records that a gift of 95 sheep by a private individual of Alisavur in Alisavur-nadu, a subdivision of Kaliyur-Kottam to the temple of Ainjanjandi Durga battāraki (A.R.E. 74/1921).

4. An inscription in Tamil on the east wall of the Durga shrine in the Kachapisvara temple, Big Kanchipuram, Chingleput district, dated in the 16th year of the Chola king Rajendra choladeva, records a gift of gold by Nigarili-lokamadevi, a servant of the queen Mukkokkilānadigal and by a temple dancing girl called Perri Ponnambalam, for two perpetual lamps to be burnt in the shrine of the Goddess Ainjanjandi-Durgaiyar (A.R.E. 73/1921).

5. An inscription in Tamil dated in the 18th year of the Chola king Rajendra choladeva records a gift of gold by a private individual of Māgaral, in Eyir kottam, for offerings and worship to the Goddess Durgaiyār during the pushya day in the month of Aippasi, every year (A.R.E. 77/1921).

6. An inscription in Tamil, on the base of the north and west walls of the Durga shrine in the Kachapisvara temple dated 18th year of the Chola king Rajaraja, Rajakesarivarman records gift of 60 Kalanju of gold by the residents of sirunanraiur, a devadana, situated in Ambi-nadu in Eyil-Kottam for burning for perpetual lamps in the name of the king in the temple of Ainjanjandi Durgaiyār of Kanchipuram (A.R.E. 78/1921).

7. An inscription in Tamil in the Lakshminarayana Perumal temple at Sinnamanur dated in the reign of the Chola king Rajendra chola devar, records sale of land for a lamp to the shrine of Durga Paramesvariya, by the assemblies of three villages viz. Arikesarinallur, Arapādasekara mangalam and Mandaragaurava mangalam (A.R.E. 439/1908).

8. An inscription in Tamil in the Siva Temple, Eydanur, Cuddalore, South Arcot district, dated 28th year of the Chola king Rajakesarivarman alias Kulottunga choladeva records the different amounts of money received prior to the 28th year of the king by several sivabrahmanas from Thirvayindran Viraiyan and Meykilan of Eydanur for burning lamps in the temples of Tirumandurai-Andar at Colakulavallinallur in Pattampakkai padu, a sub division of Gangaikondasola Valanadu and Ganapatiyar in the same village (A.R.E. 141/1933-34).

9. An inscription in Tamil dated in the reign of the Chola king Kulottunga choladevar (42nd year) records that the lands belonging to the temple of Emalattu Durgaiyar Onkara sundariyar, situated in the eastern hamlet of this village with the temple flower garden and tank were registered as a village gift to the said goddess under class 12. This land was renamed Bhupala sundara vilāgam after demarcating the lands and fixing the boundaries (A.R.E. 207/1919).

10. An inscription in Tamil in a dry land called Nattakkollai, Ariyūr, Tirukoyilur taluk, South Arcot district record the nonbu observed by a certain lady in the temple of Durga characters belong to the 11th century A.D. (A.R.E. 234/1936-37).

11. An inscription in Tamil in Tevadiyakuppam, South Arcot district dated 27th year of the Chola king Tribhuvanachakravartin Rajarajadeva III, registers a gift of the village Attamalayamanpatti, in Vanagoppadi-nadu by Akarasuram Tiruvannamalai perumal alias Rajagambira Chediyarayan for offerings and worship to the God Vayirisuramudaiya Nayanar alias Erivalan Chydanayanar and Durgaiyar at Sanbai (A.R.E. 450/1937-38).

12. An inscription in Tamil in the Lakshmi Narayanasvamin temple Mudigondam dated in the reign of the Hoysala king Vira somesvara deva records gift of a garden to the temple by the mahajanas of Durgaiyar-agaram (A.R.E. 7/1910).

13. An inscription in Tamil in the Vijāghrapurisvara temple Pulippakkam, Chingleput, dated in 14th year of the Telugu Chola king Vijay Gandagopala devar, registers a similar gift by the Pillaiyarmudali belonging to the temple, for a twilight lamp to be burnt before the image of Durga, set up by him in the temple (A.R.E. 10/1932-33).

14. An inscription in Tamil (Vatteluttu) in the Tiruvaludisvara temple, perungulam, Srivaikuntam Taluk, Tinneveli district dated in the reign of Pandya king Jatavarman alias Sundara chola pandyadeva records a gift of 25 sheep lay, a vellala named Ikkansiriyar for a sacred lamp to the image of Durgaiyar in the temple of Tiruvaludisvara at Perungulam alias Uttamacolanallur in Tiruvaludi valanadu, a district of Uttamcola Valanadu in Rajaraja Pandinadu (A.R.E. of 1932-33).

15. An inscription in Tamil in the Durga temple Attuvampadi Polur Taluk North Arcot District dated, Saka 1374 of the Vijayanagara king Virapratapa Praudha Mallikarjuna deva Maharaya remarks an order of Mahapradhana Ganapanna Dannayakkar to the tanattar of the several temples including Dharmisvaramudaiya Nayanar and Umapatisvaramudaiya Nayanar allotting this annual contribution of jodi and sulavari taxes amounting to 90 panam payable at 7½ panam amount, for the daily midday offerings and worship in the temple of Prasanna Durga devi for the merit of the king (A.R.E. 94/1939-40).

16. An inscription in the Aruvampadi (Polut taluk) North Arcot district, dated Saka 140 (9) year of the Vijayanagara king Narasingaraya maharāya records an order of Bupparasar the agent of Nagama-Nayakar who was the mugappavadai of the king making a gift of the tax Kadukaval-Varttanai realised from the hill forest near Arruvampadi to provide for scented unguents and other materials for the Goddess Prasanna Durgadevi on special occasions for the increasing prosperity of the king and of Nagama Nayaka (A.R.E. 93/1939-40).

17. An inscription in the Durga temple Attuvampadi, Polur taluk, North Arcot district dated saka 1434, year of the Vijayanagara king Krishnaraya maharaya records the sale of the village Malaiyampatti, for 500 panam to Tirumalai-Nayakka son of Ekkappa Nayakka, a Kannadiyanayaka of Marudarasar-Padaividu, by a number of persons who fixed its rent as 20 panam and 50 Kalam of paddy per annum which had to be paid by the purchaser to the Durga temple (A.R.E. 92/1939-40).

18. An inscription in Tamil in the Durga temple Atturampadi, Polur Taluk, North Arcot district, records appointment of two shepherds, Ilaiyperumal and pirattialvar paying taxes at 5 panam each to Murugamangalapparru and Andinadu respectively as the tiruvillakkukkudi for measuring out ghee of that value to the Prasanna Durgadevi temple for a perpetual lamp on behalf of idaitturai Chinnamarajar (A.R.E. 91/1939-40).

19. An inscription in the Durga temple Attuvampadi, Polur taluk, North Arcot district dated in the reign of the Vijayanagar king Virapratapa Vira Bhu (Patiraya) Maharaya records the endowment of the (entire) village Arrutampadi for offerings and worship to Durgadevi (A.R.E. 95/1939-40).

20. An inscription in Tamil in Pugaippatti, Tirukkoyilur taluk, South Arcot district specifies the mayana land belonging to a Kuttadi, probably attached to the Durga temple.

SELECT INSCRIPTIONS ON KĀLI

An inscription in Tamil on the slab set up at the Kaliyamman Temple in the village, Colapuram, Vellore Taluk, North Arcot district records a Pidari temple constructed by Nangai Mani, daughter of Ari kandan wife of Prithvigangaraiyar (A.R.E. 426/1902).

An inscription in Tamil in the Tirukkamesvara temple, Kappalur, Polur Taluk, North Arcot district seems to be the concluding portion of a record in which it is stated that the Mannudaykar (?) of the village should first offer worship in the Pidari temple and then in the Kadugal Kottam (A.R.E. 287/1938-39).

An inscription in Tamil near the Siva temple Timmichchur dated 5th year of the Chola king Parakesarivarman records an endowment of sheep for the lighting of the hall (ambalam) built at Timisur, Timisur-nadu by Mummudisola-Kadupattigal and certain taxes for the expenses of maintaining it. It also states that the donor consecrated the goddess Pidari in a shrine built by him (A.R.E. 37/1936).

An inscription in Tamil in the Selliyyamman temple at Alambakkam records that the temple of Pidari was constructed by a certain Irayar Alankara priyan alias Tiru-orriyuran and seems to register a gift of land for offerings (A.R.E. 704/1910).

An inscription in Tamil in the Salliyyamman Temple at Velachcheri, Saidapet Taluk, Chingleput district records a gift of land as manjikkam by the sabha of Velachcheri in Puliyur, Kottam for the maintenance of perpetual lamp and for offerings during the two year service in the temple of Kala Bhatari (A.R.E. 317/1911).

An inscription in Tamil in the Selliyyamman temple Velachcheri, Saidapet Taluk, Chingleput district dated in 4th year of the Chola king Parakesarivarman records a gift of land to the temple of Kala-Bhatari at Velachcheri in Puliyur Kottam by the assembly of the village (A.R.E. 317/1912).

An inscription in the Maduvanesvara temple at Tirukkalavur dated 27th year of the Chola king Madirai konda Parakesarivarman, gives a list of the lands owned by the temples of Mahadeva, Kala-Pidari and Maha Vishnu at Pala-Tirukka (ru) gavur (A.R.E. 42/1910).

An inscription in Tamil in the Aiyanar temple Kottamangalam, Tiruchirappalli district dated the reign of the Chola king Parakesarivarman records some provisions made for food offerings and a lamp to Brahmisvaran Udaiya nayanar of Korramangalam; two others refer to grant of land. The fourth mentions Pidari. In characters of the 14th and 15th century (A.R.E. 657/1962).

An inscription in the Jnanaparamesvara temple Tirumeyjnanam, Kumbakonam, dated in the reign of the Chola king Parakesarivarman, refers the boundaries of a land are mentioned those belonging to God Tirupparkadal Devar, and Bhitariyar (S.I.I. XIX No. 452).

An inscription in Tamil at Karandai, Tanjore Taluk dated in the reign of the Chola king Ko-parakesari records the sale of right to do worship in the Siva temple and Pidari and Kali temple in Karuntittai Kudi to a certain Ramesvaramudaiyan by two priests of the temple of Karuntittaikudi (S.I.I. Vol. V 1412).

An inscription in Tamil in the Bramhapurisvara temple Pullamangai, near Pusupatikoil, Papanasam taluk dated in the reign of the Chola king Parakesarivarman records gift of land to the Goddess Kala Pidari (S.I.I. Vol. IX No. 63).

An inscription in Tamil in the Vedaranyesvara temple Vedaranyam, Tirutturai-ppundi Taluk, Tanjore district dated 18th year of the Chola king Parantaka I, records an endowment of 25 Kalanju of gold on Sankranti day by Koyilanachchiplariyar, wife of Sembian Muvendavelar for food offerings to the deity Tirumaraikkattu madevar from out of the interest accruing from the endowed amount (S.I.I. Vol. XVII/484).

An inscription in Tamil in the Selliyyamman temple Karadi, dated 20th year of the Rashtrakuta king Kannaradeva records a gift of 96 sheep for a perpetual lamp in the temple of Pidari Idaimalai-Nangai to the south east of the village Ravikulachulamani Chaturvedimangalam of the southern bank of Penni in Vanagoppadi, by shepherd who entrusted it to the local sabha (A.R.E. 218/1936-37).

An inscription in Tamil in the Brahmapurisvara temple Pullamangalam, Pusupatikoyil Papanasan Taluk, Tanjore district, dated in the reign of the Chola king Uttama chola records that the mahasabha of Pullamangalam a Brahmadeya village in Kilar-Kuvram which met together after beat of drum in the courtyard in front of the temple of Tiruvalandurai, sold tax free a land 1½ ma in extent situated in Kandaman-galam to the temple of Kala pidari in the centre of their village for 25 Ilakkasu (S.I.I. Vol. XIX No. 63).

An inscription in Tamil in the Siva temple Tiruppanamur cheyyar taluk, North Arcot district, dated 23rd year of the Chola king Rajaraja deva records an endowment for lamps to the Parivaradevas such as Ganapathi, sapta-matrikas, Subramanya, Tirukkettaikilatti-Bhatari i. e. Jyeshthadevi, Durga, Chandesvara and Kshetrapala, in the tiruvunnaligai of the temple Urani-Nakkar at Parampur in Srikamakottapuram (A.R.E. 154/1939-40).

An inscription in Tamil in the Pidari temple Nangavaram, Kulittalai taluk, Kulittalai district dated in the reign of the Chola king Ko-Rajakesari (S.I.I. Vol. VIII 655).

An inscription in Tamil dated in the reign of the Kongu-chola king Virarajendra-deva records that Yalvallam Ullalaichchevagam, a mudali of Kiranur in Pongalurkannadu engraved on stone and copper the gift of land made by his grandfather Somanathadevar alias Anuttirppallavaraiyar for offering to the Goddess Rangapidariyar (A.R.E. 175/1919).

An inscription in Tamil in the Mahalingesvamin temple Tiruvidaimarudur dated in the reign of the Chola king Tribhuvana chakravartin Konerinmaikondan records gift to the shrine of the Pidari Yogirunda-Paramesvari in the fourth Prakara of the temple (A.R.E. 307/1908).

An inscription in Tamil on a slab set up in a field called Paruttirattan-Kollai, Memalur, dated 35th year of the Chola king Kulottunga choladeva states that an image of Pidari was set up by Perumal Palli, a workman of Memalur in Kurukkai-Kurram, a subdivision of Miladu alias Jannathavalanadu (A.R.E. 230/1936-37).

An inscription in Tamil in the Jnanaparamesvara temple Tirumeyjnanam, Kumbakonam Taluk, Tanjore district registers a sale of 521 Kuli of land tax free, by the Perunguri perumakkal of the Mahasabha including the Battapperumakkal of Nalur, a brahmadeya in Sevr Kurram for 5 Kalanju of gold to a merchant of the village named Narana Tallam, who endowed the same after purchase to the temple of Tirumayanadeva. Among the boundaries of this land are mentioned those belonging to god Tirupparkadal Devar Bhitariyar (Bhatari) (S.I.I. Vol. XIX No. 452).

An inscription in Tamil in the Apratisvara temple Nagar, Lalgudi Taluk, Trichy district, dated in the reign of the Chola king Kulottunga seems to refer to the lands allotted to the temple servants viz. priests, paricharakas and svayampakis. Refers to the land Turaimugam chey and mentions a Pidari koll among the boundaries (A.R.E. 685/1962).

An inscription in Tamil in the Baktajanesvara temple Tirunamanallur, Tirukkoyilur Taluk, South Arcot district dated in the reign of the Chola king Kulottunga chola deva records gift of money for burning lamps before the image of Tiruvidi-Nachchiyar set up in the temple by a certain Siuttondan (A.R.E. 264/1939-40).

An inscription in Tamil in the Pidari temple at Neyyadipakkam, Kanjeevaram, Chingleput dated 13th year of the Chola king Kulottunga chola deva records gift of 1½ kasu by a private individual for a lamp to be burnt in the Pidari temple at Neyarrupakkam in Terodu Paluvur nadu a subdivision of Kaliyur Kottam, a district of Jayangonda sola mandalam (A.R.E. 261/1922).

An inscription in Tamil in the Tiruvirattanesvara temple at Tiruvadi Cuddalore Taluk, South Arcot in the reign of Sambuvaraya records gift of 3000 kuli of land by Samuvaraya for providing sandal paste to the Goddess Chamundi Nachchiyar set up in the temple of Tiruvirattanam Udaiya Nayanar (A.R.E. 384/1921).

An inscription in Tamil in the Tiruvallisvara temple, Padi, (Tiruvatidayam) dated in the 3rd year of the king Tribhuvanachakravartin-Vijaya Gandagopaladeva records, a dancing girl of the Tiruvegambam Udaiya-nayanar temple of the Goddess Tiruvidinachchiar in the temple at Tiruvallidayam and presented both to the God and Goddess a number of jewels and vessels (A.R.E. 217/1911).

An inscription in Tamil in the Siva temple Sirudavur, Chingleput Taluk, Chingleput district dated 7th year in the reign of the Pandya king Jatavarman Tribuvana Chakravartin Sundara Pandya deva records a remission of taxes by order of the king through his officer (Mudali) Pillai Irungolur on several pieces of land purchased by the temple authorities and the nyayattar of the village from a certain Rajendrasola-Tagadurnadalvan and others for requirements of the Goddess Aranavalli Nachchiyar in the temple (A.R.E. 94/1933-34).

An inscription in Tamil in the Devapurisvara temple at Tevur, Nagappattinam taluk, Tanjore district dated 1 (I) 1287 A.D. in the reign of the Pandya king Jatavarman Sundara Pandyan II records refer only the name of a Pidarikovil (A.R. 518/1904 Vol. XVII).

An inscription in Tamil in the Sivaparipurani shrine in the Tribuvananathesvara temple at Tenmalai Sankaranayinar koil, dated 6th year in the reign of the Pandya king Jatavarman alias Tribuvanachakravartin Vira Pandya deva registers a sale of land by the assembly of Sundara Pandya Chaturvedi Mangalam, a brahmadeya in Arinadu, for the requirements of the Goddess of Sivanaimuludumudaiya Nachchiyar who was set up in the temple of Tiruppattisvaramudaiya-Nayanar by Tiruvanaikkavudaiyan-Udaya-divakaran alias Venadudaiyan, a native of Kugur in Vadavettani alias Sundara Pandya Valanadu mentions the temple of Tirumolisai Vinnagar Emberuman (A.R.E. 613/1915-16).

An inscription in Tamil in the Virapandisvaramudaiya Nayanar temple dated 5th year and 334th day in the reign of the Pandya king Tribuvanachakravartin Konerinmai Kondan records a gift of land and house sites to certain Brahmins for reciting the Vedas for making a flower garden and for providing offerings to the temple of Virapandisvaramudaiya nayanar built in the name of the king by a certain Vaidyachakravarti. The Goddess is called Veyanatoli-Nachchiyar (A.R.E. Vol. IV 1919/12 B. No. 510 stone inscription 1918).

An inscription in Tamil in the Pidariamman temple Dalayappattanam, Coimbatore taluk, Dharmapuri district dated 24th year in the reign of the Kongu Pandya king Tribhuvanachakravartin Sundara Pandya deva records a gift of gold for a twilight lamp to the Pidariamman called Nanadesa Nangai (A.R.E. 158/1920).

An inscription in Tamil in the Kakolanatha temple at Tirukkalakkudi, Ramnad district dated 7th year in the reign of the Pandya king Jatavarman alias Tribhuvanachakravartin Sundara Pandya Deva records a gift of land by purchase for celebrating the festival to the image Nachchiyar Udaiyandar set up in the shrine of Pidariyar Alagiya Nachchiyar by a native of Kulasekarapuram in Kalvagil Nadu. (A.R. of the AAS. Vol. VI 1916-18 p. 69).

An inscription in Tamil in the Arikesanatha temple at Giryambapuram dated in the reign of the Pandya king Jatavarman alias Tribhuvanachakravartin Kula (Sekhara deva) records gift of 8 achchu for a perpetual lamp by a lady. Another gift of 2 achchu for the Goddess Periyanachchiyar is also recorded (A.R.E. 466/1916-17).

An inscription in Tamil in the Osuramma shrine Tiruvur, Tiruvallur Taluk, Chingleput district dated Vrishika SU 10, record on endowment of land as garden (Sringaratottam) made by the Mahajanas of Turugur to the Goddess Ellamma (A.R.E. 87/1947-48).

An inscription in Tamil in Mutyalamman shrine Velanadal, Polur Taluk, North Arcot district dated Saka 1550 in the reign of the king records an endowment of Venkatadri Nayaka of Nellippattu (A.R.E. 89/1942-43).

An inscription in Tamil in the Mutyalamman shrine dated Suk(1a) Masi (10) in the reign of the king records a grant of another bit of land to the same Goddess by Raghupati Nayaka (A.R.E. 90/1942-43).

An inscription in Telugu in the Poleramma temple dated saka 1335 Pramadi in the reign of the Kakatiya king Mahamandalesvara Prataparudradeva Maharaja records provides for offering to the temple of Ganga Paramesvari (A.R.E. 585/1910).

An inscription in Tamil in the Nellaiyappar temple Tinneveli, Tinneveli taluk, Tinneveli district dated 22nd year in the reign of the Cera king, Keralan Kulasekaran records a lake in the name of Kali near Kunrathur in Tinneveli district (S.I.I. Vol. V 450).

An inscription in Tamil in the Renukamba temple Padavedu Polur taluk, North Arcot district dated in the reign of the Vijayanagar king Kumara Timmaraya Udaiyar record an order by an agent (name lost) of the king to one Aiya Noyan to supply a flower garden (to the temple on specific occasions) mentions a garden called Soma-devanttam (A.R.E. 49/1940-41).

An inscription in Tamil in the Renukamba temple Padavedu Polur Taluk, North Arcot district, dated saka 1394 in the reign of the Vijayanagara king Mahamandalesvara Narsingaraya Udaiyar records an order of Pradhoma Nayinar of Padaividu, the agent of the king treating as manya, the fees received in the temple of Ekkaladevi amman on ordinary days and festival occasions (A.R.E. 41/1940-41).

An inscription in Tamil in the Mariamman temple Padakam, Polur taluk, North Arcot district dated Saumya Avani in the reign of the king records the provision made for reading the Puranan in the matha constructed by Suryabhatar (170/1941-42).

An inscription in Tamil in the Renukamba temple Padavedu Polur taluk, North Arcot district dated saka 1484 in the reign of the Vijayanagara king, Srirangadeva Maharaya records an order of Idaitturai Tambikkon and Kavanayakkon, the agents of china Bommu Nayakarayyan of Velur appointing four persons as Tiruvilakkuk-kudi for the annual supply of ghee for burning lamps and for the sacred bath of Goddess Prasanna Ekkaladevi ammai of Nurudarasar Padaividu on the days of Tiruvadirai and of four sheep each day on the days of Mahanavami and Panguniuttiram (A.R.E. 45/1940-41).

An inscription in Tamil in the slab in a private land Narasingapuram Polur taluk, North Arcot district dated Plavanga in the reign of the Vijayanagara king Venkatapati Maharaya records a gift of land to Goddess Ellamma (A.R.E. 150/1941-42).

An inscription in Tamil in the Bairava temple Tiruvalangadu, Tiruttani division dated saka 1442 in the reign of the Vijayanagara king Mahamandalesvara Krishnadeva Maharaja records a transaction made by the acharyas of the four Mandapas assembled at Nagaladeviammapuram with the blessing of Kalikadevi (A.R.E. 193/1942-43).

An inscription in Tamil in the Kali temple Pugaippatti, Tirukkoyilur taluk, South Arcot district dated Chitrabhanu, Panguni 13 in the reign of the king records a gift of land by Rama Nayaka, son of Seppili Ellappa Nayakka for service in the temple of the Goddess Pidariyar, for the merit of Siddhamanayani Annamalai Nayaka (A.R.E. 358/1937-38).

An inscription in Tamil in the Pidari temple Nangavaram, Kulittalai taluk, Kulittalai district dated 4th year in the reign of the Chola king, Kovirajakesari Panmar records a gift of two Nali rice for Tiruvamudu to the Goddess of Pidariyar Sattanur Nangai (S. I. I. No. 655 A.R. No. 346/1903).

An inscription in Tamil in the Pidari temple Nangavaram, Kulittalai taluk, Kulittalai district dated in the reign of the Chola king Madirai Konda Kopparakesari Panmar records a gift of land to the Goddess Mahakalattu Padariyana Sattanur Nangai (S.I.I. No. 654, A.R. No. 345/1903).

An inscription in Tamil in the Pasupatisvara temple Allur, Trichinopoly taluk, Trichinopoly district dated 17th year in the reign of the Chola king Madirai Konda Kopparakesari Panmar records a gift of land to the Goddess Kaliyar Thudavai (A.R.E. 381/1963).

An inscription in Tamil in the Virattanesvara temple Tiruvadi, Cuddalore taluk, South Arcot district dated 23rd year in the reign of the Chola king Rajendrachola Devar, mentions the name of the village Pidari Patti (S.I.I. 316 A.R.No. 42/1903).

An inscription in Tamil in the slab set up at Tiruvadavur, Melur taluk, Madura district dated in the 16th year in the reign of the Pandya king Komaravarman Tribuvana-chakravartin Sri Sundara Pandya Devar records, mentions the name of the Goddess Samundesvari (A.R.E. 135/1903).

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Ācharya, Śrīkaṇṭha : Brahmasūtra bāshya (Sanskrit quotations), Nirnaya Sagar Edition, Bombay, 1918.
- Arunachalam, M. : An Introduction to History of Tamil Literature, Madras, 1974.
History of Tamil Literature-11th Century, Kalladam, 1971.
History of Tamil Literature-12th Century, Part 1, Madras.
History of Tamil Literature-12th Century (Tamil), Madras, 1973.
History of Tamil Literature-13th Century (Tamil), Madras, 1970.
- Banerjee, J.N. : Development of Hindu Iconography, Calcutta, 1956.
- Bhat, N.R. (Ed) : Ajitagama, Pondicherry.
Mrgendra Āgama, Pondicherry, 1962.
Rauravagama, Pondicherry.
Suprabhedagama, Pondicherry.
- Bhattacharya, N.N. : History of Sakta Religion, 1974.
Bhṛgusamhita, Tripati.
- Chathopadhyaya, Devi Prasad : Lokayata.
- Desikar, S. Dandapani : Tiruvachakam, notes, Dharmapuram, 1949.
- Devasenapathy : Saiva Siddhānda, Madras, 1974.
- Dikshitar, V.R. Ramachandra : The Silappadikāram, translated with an introduction and notes, Madras, 1939.
- Gnanasambandam, A. S. : Manikkavachakar, Annamalai University, 1974.
- Iyengar, M. Ragava : Āraichi Tohuti (Tamil), Madras, 1964.

- Iyer, U.V. Swaminatha (Ed.) : Kuruntokai, Madras, 1962.
Maṇimekalai Madras, 1956.
Paḍirru Pattu, Madras, 1957.
Pattu Pāṣṭu, Madras, 1974.
Puṟapporuḷ Venḍāmālai, text and commentary, Madras, 1963.
Silappadhikāram, text and commentary, 7th ed. Madras, 1960.
Takkayagapparani, Madras, 1945.
Tiruvilālyadarapurānam of Perumparrapuliyaṉ Nambi, 1927.
- Jñānavarna vilakkam*, with the commentary of Velliyambalavana Tambiran, Dharmapuram, 1957.
- Kalingattuparaṇi*.
Karanagama.
- Kumār, Pushpendra : Sakti Cult in Ancient India, Varanasi, 1974.
- Mahadevan, I. : Corpus of Tamil Brahmi Inscriptions in R. Nagaswamy (Ed.), Seminar on Inscriptions, Madras, 1968.
- Marichi Samhita*, Madras, 1926.
- Nagaswamy, R. : Arunagiri and Annamalai Inscriptions, S.I.I., Vol. VIII, No. 80.
- Pillai, Avvai S. Duraiswamy : Jñānāmīrtham with commentary, Annamalai University, 1954.
- Pillai, M. V. Venugopala : Yapparunkalam, Madras, 1960.
- Pillai, Subramanya K. (Tr.) : Sivapparakasam (English), Dharmapuram, 1945.
- Rajam, S. (Ed.) : Aḥṇanūru, Madras, 1958.
Kalittokai, Madras, 1957.
Tolkāppiyam, Madras, 1960.
- Sankalpa-Nirakarana*, Maikanda Sattiram. Published by Dharmapuram Mutt, 1942.
- Sastri, Ganapati : Esana sivagura deva Paddhati, Trivandrum.
- Sastri, S. Suryanarayan : Sivadvaita of Srikanta, Madras, 1972.
- Sastry, K.A. Nilakanta : A History of South India, Madras, 1977.
- Sekkilar : Tirutondarpurānam, 1964.
- Seturaman, S.V. : Arunagiri and Devi, Madras, 1968.
- Sivagnānabodom*—Meikanda Sattiram, Published by Dharmapuram Mutt, 1942.
- Sivagnānasiddhiyar*, Meikanda Sattiram, Published by Dharmapuram Mutt, 1942.
- Smith, H. Danial : Vaiṣṇava Iconography, Madras, 1960.
- South Indian Inscriptions*, Volume I, No. 33, Volume V and Volume VIII, No. 47.

Thirugnanasambandam, P. (Tr.) : Sataratna Sangraha (English), Madras University, 1973.

Tirukkalirruppaḍiyār*, Meikaṇḍa Sattiram, Published by Dharmapuram Mutt, 1942.

Tirumandiram* : Saiva Siddhanda Publishing Society, Madras.

Tiruvavaduturai Ed.

Saiva Siddhanda Samajam Publication.

Tiruppugal*, Saiva Siddhanda Samajam (Ed.).

Tiruvachakam*, Ed. Saiva Siddhanda Samajam, Saiva Siddhanda Publishing Society, Tiruvavaduthurai.

Tiruvundiyaṛ*, Meikaṇḍa Sattiram, Published by Dharmapuram Mutt, 1942.

Wheeler, Sir Mortimer : Ancient India, No. 2.

Woodroffe, Sir John : Serpent power.

Sakti and Sakta*.

Vyasa Vaidya Sadas*, Souvenir, Madras, 1968.

INDEX

ābharana 121, 196
abhaya 57, 58, 61, 101, 121, 122, 134, 163, 174, 177, 182, 185, 199, 209
abhaya mudra 56, 201
Abhiramavallī 198
Abhirāmi, 51, 66
Abhirāmi andārit 2
abhisēka 110, 111, 144, 196
Abhishekavallī 198 ābhūjavārada 185 ācamaniya 121
ācamaniyam puṣpa 121
Ācharya 14, 77
Ācharya Sankara 2
ādharma (s) 50, 71, 106
Ādhāra Āsheya 52, 56
Ādhāra devas 63
Ādharasakti 62 ādharma sikhānas 55
ādheya 106
Ādhidevata 16, 80
adhishṭhāna 147, 148, 191
Adhomāyā 53
Adhyāya 43
Ādi 55
Ādi Ambika 66
Ādi Bhairava 51, 58
Ādi Bhuvanesvari 174
Adicchanallur 142
Ādinatha 83, 174
Ādinayaki 69
Ādi Śakti 16, 41, 58, 72, 78, 88
Adisesha 27, 30
Aditya (Chola) 176, 177, 182, 188
Ādityas 30

Ādivarāha 144, 147
Ādivarāha cave temple 157
Ādivarāha temple 120 adoration of Sakti 7
Advaita doctrine 2
Advaitakkalavi 45
Advaitavāma 93
Advaitavāmi 95
Advaraha cave 152
ādyaśṣaka vīdhāna 25
Āgamas 11, 36, 47, 49, 51, 60, 64, 66, 74, 80, 86, 87, 89, 91, 93, 95, 98, 102, 104, 106, 111, 112, 114-117, 119, 122, 131, 161
Āgama Sastra 33
Āgamasundari 66
Āgamic cults 107
Āgamic citations 92
Āgamic doctrine 98
Āgamic Mantra 80, 108
Āgamic mode 36
Āgamic school 81
Āgamic texts 90
Aghora 128
Aghora Virabhadra 200
Aghoshāvāk 91
Agñā-Vadhā 23
Āgneya 103
Āgneyi 127
Agni 35, 56, 128
Agni Durga 80
Agnikesa 140
Agnivarṇa 16
Ahanānūru 5 āhūjavārada mudra 177, 190
Aindri 127

- Aṅgurūṇṇu* 44
Ainjanjandi Durgatīyār 216, 217
Airavatesvara 188 temple 181, 209
Aiyai 7
Aiyanar temple 219
Ajita 103
Ajitāgama 109, 115, 117, 118
Ājñā cakras 57, 158
ākāśa 30, 60, 101
Akhilanda 198
Akilaṇḍa Nayaki 66
akṣhamāla 133, 136, 140, 143, 165, 168, 184, 185, 188, 189, 193, 201, 204, 209
Akshayapātra 19 ālakāla (poison) 7 alankara 198
Alambakkam 169
Alagiyazokkiyār 215
alaku 27
Āludaiyadeva 72
Alupta 98
Amarabhayankara 215
Amarī 7
Ambā 43
Ambā-Āḍal 44
ambalam 17
Ambalavanesvaram temple 176
ambāri 196
Ambāstuti 2, 94
Ambāvāḍal 44
Ambikā 66, 73, 167
Ambikai bhāga 71
Ambikā Śakti 81
Amirtapana 30, 210
Amṛta 30, 128
amṛta kalasa 62, 139, 210
Amṛtanandasundarī 55
Amsumān 103
Amsurnadāgama 111, 112, 114
Ammal appa 35
Amman shrine 173, 183-185, 194, 196 amorous sports 23
amuda 28
Anāḍibodhatva 98
Anāhata 106
 bindu 91
Ananda Coomaraswamy 101
Ānandamohini 51
Anandasagarasthara 199
Ānanda Śakti 53, 54
Ānandasundarī 54
Ānanda Tāṇḍava 101, 202
Anangu 10
Anantasāyi 144
Ananta Śaktimatva 98
Ānava Māya 90 aṇḍa 21 aṇḍagolas 32
Āṇḍal 43, 44
Āṇḍalai 26
angamantras 62 angalayas 191
Animā 61
anjali 120, 150, 201
anjalihasta 120, 127
Anjali pose 171
Ankalamman 202
Ankayali Kanni 194
Ankayarkkanni 199
ankuśa 53, 54, 61, 122, 147, 174, 200, 204 annapātra 210
Anorapī 53 antapura 197 antarāla 56
Antarī 7, 53
antaryāga 55
antra-Gaurimimāya 112 anumatī 121
aparā 103, 104
Aparājita 123
aparāḍhāna 103 apasmāra 101
Appayya dukṣhita 97, 198
Apratisvara temple 221 apsaras 210
Aranavallī Aa Nachchitayar 221
Archaeological excavations 3 ardhamāṇḍapa 154, 155, 165, 169, 185, 216
Ardhanari, 12, 41, 53, 69, 209 aspects 13
 Deva 12 images 8 arghya 121 arha 60
Arichandana 34
Arikesanatha temple 222
Arikkamedu 3
Arjuna ratha 149
Arulnandi 87
Arulnandi Sivāchārya 76

- Arunachalam, M. 20fn, 21, 23, 23fn, 46, 68fn, 71fn, 74
 Arunagiri 65, 67
 Arya 213
 Āryadesa 181
 ashtadasabhuja 179 ashtadikgajas 32
 ashtamahānāgas 32
 ashtamāta 124, 185
 ashtaparivāra temple 161
 Ashja Śakti 51, 202, 203
 Ashṭasakti mandapa 195, 203
 Assam 48
 astagiri 31
 Asthana mandapa 196, 197
 astra 130
 Astra mantras 55
 Asuddhandyā 69
 asuras 7, 20, 30, 81, 86, 153, 154, 192
 asuric devil 157
 Atiranacanda cave temple 187
 ātmārtha pūja 105
 Ātma Śakti 63
 Ātma suddhi 121
 Āryantakāma 146
 Āryantakāma Pallavesvara grihas 146 āupanishada 107
 Aupanishadī-Mīmamsa 97
 Aushadevāda, 93
 Aushadevāmi 94
 Avabadha 90
 Āvāhana 88
 Avanihatana Pallavesvaram 143 avarai 7 āvarana 119
 Avayoga 73
 Avimukta 47
 Avippati 10, 11
 Avvai S. Duraiswamy Pillai 68fn
 Ayadha purushas 151
 Ayas 43

 Bādarāyaṇa 97
 Bairava temple 223
 Baktajanesvara Temple 221
 Bāla 56
 bālālaya 120
 Balāpramathani 43
 Balapramathini 110
 Bala Tripurasundari 198
 Balavikarini 43, 110 bali 11, 122, 126, 129, 130
 Bali dāna 10, 11
 Balikkoḍai 10
 Balipīṭha (s) 17, 26, 31, 127, 129, 130
 Banerjee, J.N. 16, 132
 Benaras 64, 92
 Bengal 48, 64
 Bhadrakālī 12, 66, 179, 181, 201
 bhadras 134
 bhadrasana 184
 Bhagavati 213
 Bhairava Cakra 52, 58
 cults 27, 36, 49 faith 37 images 160
 sect 38, 93
 vāsha 38
 Veshādhiri 33, 37, 38
 Bhairavi 13, 16, 20, 33, 34, 55, 66, 67, 81, 128, 138, 186, 208, 216 mantra 52, 54
 Bhairavins 38
 Bhakti 40, 84 cult 57 hymns 101
 Jāna 99
 mārga 84 movements 40, 64
 Bhārati 20
 bhāshya 101
 Bhat, N.R. 108
 Bhattacharya 48
 Bhautik Vratin 105
 Bhava 98
 Bhavabhuti 17
 Bhavānī 66
 Bhādana 94
 Bhedavāda 89
 Bhikṣhāṇa 115
 Bhikshuni 15, 17
 Bhīmā 128
 Bhīmā Samhitā 92
 Bhishana 123
 Bhishani 123
 Bhitariyar 219
 Bhoga 53, 62, 70, 88
 Bhogadeva 56
 Bhoga mārga 57
 Bhōga pīṭha 205, 206
 Bhōgāsakti 53, 79
 Bhogasthāna 206

- Bhṛigu Samhita* 119, 120
 Bhudevi 31, 170
Bhukti 118
Bhūta 33, 41, 126, 128 suddhi 121
Bhuvandpati Cakra 52, 58
Bhuvantśvarī 139
 Bihar 48 bījaksharas 51, 109, 112
Bīja mantra 114
bījas 128
Bimbamudra 110
bimba suddhi 121
Bindu 56, 57, 63, 69, 70, 78, 81, 82, 85
Bindu Śakti 81
Brahmā 11, 24, 25, 27, 28, 30-33, 35, 53, 54, 62, 78, 93, 106, 117, 125, 128, 145, 150, 165, 170, 205, 208, 209
Brahmadesa 211
Brahma Durga 133, 134
Brahma Kuṇḍalini Tattva 91
Brahman 14, 15, 24, 98-100, 102, 128, 181, 222
Brahmanadī 123
Brahmaṇḍa pūrana 34
Brahmapurisvara Temple 178, 220
Brahmasutras 97
Brahmayiddhi 120
Brahma Yamaśas 34
Brahmin 10, 15, 33, 37, 77
Buddha Bhikṣuṇī 18
Buddhi 62
 Buddhism 15
 Buddhist 1, 17
 Buddhist work 16, 17

Cakras 34, 52, 54, 60, 61, 119, 201
Cāmuṇḍa 24, 54, 125, 128, 131, 158
Caṇḍa aṣṭāhāsa 157
Candikā 51, 53, 66, 145
Caṇḍīrahasya 199
Candra 54, 56
Candrajālāna 103
Candranāṇḍala 57
Candrasila 100
Carminī 33
Caryā 50, 95, 104
Caryāpāda 104, 105
 Cathopadhyaya, Devi Prasad 48
Caturānana Paṇḍita 68
 Ceylon 13
Chakra 7, 18

Chakravāḍagiri 31
Chakravāḍakkottam 16, 18
Chakravāḍa mountain 31
Chalukya 146, 186, 188
Champa 16
Champā pati 9, 15, 16-18
Chanda 134
Chandesvar 220
Chandika 213
Chandra 32, 35
Chandrāditya 188
Chāndramāna 44
Channavīra 38, 178, 192
 charriot 16, 20
Chatura Tāṇḍava 174
Chayanas 106
Chera king 13, 15
 rulers 3, 23, 28, 35, 68, 74
Chidākāśa 102
Chidambaram 25, 36, 40, 42, 45, 63, 101, 102, 160, 179, 183, 184, 207
 Gopuras 179-181
 temple 86, 178, 206
Chidambara Māhātmya 92
Chingleput 210, 214, 217, 219, 221, 222 chūḍmūtra 128
Chīnmayī 123
Chin mudra 204
Chintādevi 15, 19
Chirrambalakkovai 42
Chitra 195
Chit Śakti 75, 76, 78, 81, 84, 99, 101, 102
Chittiricai 216
Chola 68 court 63 country 186
 Emperor 68 period 28, 29, 185
Cholapuram 45
Christian era 1, 3, 6
Chīṭya 92, 103
Coimbatore 192, 214, 215, 222 crescent moon 7, 8, 21, 30, 31, 38, 41
Cuddalore 217

Dākinī 126
Dakṣiṇa 72
Dakṣhiṇācāra 56
Dakṣiṇāmūṛthi 55-57, 115, 169
Dakṣiṇa school 93

- damaruka* 38, 58, 62, 101, 155, 169, 183, 186, 200, 201, 204
daṇḍa 61, 209
 Daṇḍu Māri 168
 Dandapani, Desikar S. 46
 Dantiverman 154, 169
 Darasuram 180-182, 206, 207
 Gopura 180
 temple 178, 210
 Dārūka 45
 Darukāvana 12
 Dārūkāsura 12, 40, 45
 Deśika 104
 Devakoshṭas 192
 devaloka 210, 211
Deva prāsādam 93
 Devapurisvara temple 222
Devāram 38, 40
 hymns 42
 Devas 77, 133, 159, 167
 Devasenapathis 80, 83
 Devata 59, 114
Devī agni 119
Devī bhāgavata 69, 154
 Devī cult 67, 183
Devī kālōttara 89
Devī mādātmya 147, 168, 176
Devīyāmala 89
 Dhanalakshmi 61
dhāraṇa 106
 Dharapuram 214
Dharā Śakti 53 dharma 41
 Dharmapuram mutt 92
 Dharmapuri 171
 Dharmarājamaṇḍapa 146, 152, 187
 Dharmarāja ratha 146-148 dhūpa 36, 121
dhvaja sthamba 199
dhyāna 106, 165
dhyāna mudra 166
dhyāna slokas 59, 132, 133 dikpalas 119 dīksha 83
dīpa 36, 121
dīparadhana 196, 197
Dīptā 103, 118
Dīptāgama 108
 Dravida desa 86
 Drāviḍa kings 86
dravya suddhi 121
 Dr. Smith 122
 Durgā 39-41, 117, 120-122, 142, 145, 147-152, 155, 156, 160, 161, 164, 165, 167, 168, 170-172, 174, 175, 177-179, 181, 182, 184, 186, 189, 199, 209, 211, 213, 216, 217, 219, 220
Durgabhakta 121
Durga bīja mantra 119
Durgā Gāyatrī 121, 122
Durgaiyar 217, 218
 Durgā-Kālī 181
Durga Kalpa 119
Durgā mantra 122
Durga Paramesvariya 217
 Durga parishadas 123
Durgā Pūja 121, 122
 Durgasena 123
 Durga shirne 217
 Durga temple 149, 151, 218
dvadasanta 198
Dvaitavāma āgama 93
Dvaita vāma siddhānta 95
Dvaitavāmi 95
dvārasāla 183
Dvāradevatas 118, 129
 dvārapālikas 120, 121, 147, 150, 151, 155, 184, 185, 203
 Ekambarasvara 38, 114
 Ekambarasvara temple 190
elāchakra 30
Ellamma 222
 Ellamman 223
 Ellora 173
Erolī Cakra 57
Eṣṭuthogal 3
 Eyinars 9
gada 56, 57, 122
 Gajabahu 15
 gajahasta 101, 201
 Gajalakshmi 152, 168
gana(s) 33, 150, 157, 159, 174
Ganandīyikās 117, 124
Ganapati 189, 220
 Ganapati Sthapati, V. 132
Gānapathyam 145
gandha 36, 121
Gandharvas 120, 134, 143, 167
 Ganesa 24, 27, 28, 123, 145, 167, 169, 170, 172, 203, 210
 Ganesa ratha 146, 187

- Ganesvara 93, 125
 Gangā 14, 16, 41, 87, 120, 121, 180, 205
 Gangaikondachola puram 166, 178, 186, 202, 206
 Ganga Paramesvari 223
 Gangetic plains 175
 garbha 25
garbhagaṛha 118, 150, 151, 159, 166, 180, 189, 190
garbhavinyasa 25
garimā siddhi 94
 Garuda 30, 32, 126, 134
 Gauḍadesa 181
 Gauri 7, 66, 114, 131
Gauribija 110
Gauri Gāyatri 109
Gaurikumbha 112
Gaurimindya 109
Gaurimudrās 116
 Gauriprasāda 114
Gauriprathishṭhā 112, 115
 Gayaramkāra murti 114
 Gayatri 67, 126
Ghatas 59
Ghoshanī 123
 Girindra 62
 Gnanasambandam, A.S. 42 gods 10-11, 17, 19 goddess 17, 20
 Gokla 43
 Gōlaki matha 69
Gopālds 43
 Gopinatha Rao, T.V. 132
gopura(s) 26, 178-182, 184
 Goraksha 45
Gorocanaī 61
 Govardhani Amman shrine 215 grāma 16
grāmadevatas 8 grhasa 62
 Guṇḍodhara 31 guru 83, 84
Guru Darsana 50
 Gurujñānasambanda 92
 Gurujñānasambandar 92
Guruparamparā 50

 Haimavāti 21, 193
Hākimī 126
hāra 38
 Harihara aspect 30
 Harle, J.C. 182

haṭayoga 48
Haṭayōgins 56
havls 11, 43
Havis balli 10, 11
Havis siddhi 121
hemanta ṛtu 43
 hill tribes 14
 Himalayas 14, 28, 31, 85
 Himavān 20, 24, 143
 Hindu Pantheon 145
Hiranyavadha 23
Hiranya Varnā 16
homas 24, 27, 62, 95, 110
howda 196
 Hoysala Viravallāla III 65
hrdaya mantra 62
Humpai 53

Icca Śakti 53, 54, 56, 70, 73, 78, 79, 87, 110, 119, 120, 150, 180, 181, 199, 209
Idā 49
 Idakkai 201
Ilakkāsu 220
Ilamādu 41
 Ilango 7
Ilatti 17
 image worship 1
 Immadi-ketti Mudaliyar 216
 Indo-Seythian 16
Indra 25, 32, 35, 190
Indra dhraja 148
Indrojāla 28
Indrāni 24, 125, 165, 185
Indra viṭa 13
 Iravatna 188
Irugunannidaī mangaiyar 216
Irupā Irupadu 77
Isā 55, 58, 62
Isāna 78
Isānaguru 130
Isāna Siva 122, 125
Isānastva Gurudeva paddhati 115, 122, 124
Isāni 127
Isāva 94
Isi 53
Isvara 31, 78
Isvara Avikāravāda 89
Isvaragrha 152, 187
Isvari 33
Iṭṭi Eḷupadu 29

- Jaina 40
 abodes 212
 cults 1 monks 40
Jalādhvāsa 118
Jalanātasvāmi temple 169
Jambūdvīpa 16
James Harle 179, 180
Jannādi Sūtra 99
japā 95
jaṭā(s) 9, 31
Jatamākuta 7, 41, 53, 108, 138, 143, 150, 184, 189, 200, 203, 204, 209
Jatabhāra 164, 165, 185
Jatavarman 210, 215, 218, 222
Jatavarman Sundarapandya 180, 182, 185
Jatavarman Tribuvanachakra vartin 221, 222
Jawādu 58, 61
Jayā 121, 123
Jayangonḍār 22, 23, 25
Jayankondar 181
Jīvan mukti 48, 99
Jnanaparamesvara temple 219, 221
Jñānāvarnavilakkam 9 2
Jñāna 11, 50, 53, 56, 57, 70, 75, 84, 95, 195
Jñānāchāra 80, 92
Jñānadhātri 164
Jñāna dīkṣhā prākāśikā 92
Jñānakāṇḍa 31
Jñāna marga 84
Jñānāmirtan 68, 69
Jñānamudra 61
Jñānapāda 104, 106
Jnanapūram 67
Jñāna ratnāvalī 92
Jñānasambandar 40, 41
Jñānasakti 51, 53, 70, 78, 87, 99, 110, 123, 150, 180, 181, 195, 209
Jñānasiddhi 92
Jñānānta paribhāṣha 92
Jñānavesha 50
Jvātā 91
Jyeshthā 43, 81, 121, 161, 168, 169, 171, 175, 210
Jyeshthadevi 220
Jyoti 31

Kachapisvara 216
Kachapisvara temple 217
Kāḍamar Selvi 16, 17
Kadamba tree 158
Kāḍavar 9

Kadga 197, 209
Kaḍukal 12, 15
Kāḍu Pāḍiyatu 24, 25
Kailasha 36, 47, 83
Kailashanatha 41, 161
Kailasanatha temple 42, 147, 154, 178, 180, 187, 188, 191
Kailasha temple 173
Kakolanatha temple 222
Kala Bhatari 219
Kalagama 93
Kalai Niyamam 19
Kalaiyamar 7
Kala(s) 54, 57, 91, 105, 113, 128, 181
Kalahasti 40
Kalai 8, 29
Kālmukha 81
Kalakarni 111
Kalākkavi 29
Kalanju 28
Kāla nyāsa 106
Kala Pidari 219, 220
Kalasa 55, 107, 118
Kalasa sapana 107, 110
Kalavali 23, 29
Kalavāṭi 22
Kalavikarini 43
Kālī 4, 5, 12, 16-19, 21-29, 33, 40, 43, 45, 54, 69, 123, 138, 176, 177, 179, 184, 185, 192, 200-203, 211, 223
Kālī cult 28
Kālgana 45
Kalika 137
Kālikadevi 223
Kalinga 23, 28, 29, 181, 186
Kalinga Sculptures 186
Kalingatrupparant 22-24, 28, 29, 32, 67, 177, 181, 183
Kaliruppaḍiyār 72
Kālī temple 142, 184, 220, 223
Kalitogai 44
Kalittokai 5
Kali upasaka 65
Kallāḍam 20, 201, 202
Kallāḍar 20
Kālottara 89
Kalpa tree 158
Kalugumalai 172
Kalushi 123
Kalyāna 113
Kalyana Karma 113

- Kalyanasundara 24, 199
Kalyana Saundari 198
Kalyāni 66
Kāma 209
Kāmadahana 85
Kamakottakulamyl 66
Kāmakkottam 36, 38, 183, 204, 206
Kamakottamudaiya 173
Kamakottam Udaiyanachiyar 204, 214
Kāmākshi 2, 36, 207
Kamakshi temple 114, 204
Kamandalu 164-166, 168, 185, 201
Kāmāpita 288
Kampujita 213
Kama sukha 66, 69
Kāma Tantra Lila lokini 60, 67
Kāmavardhani 208
Kāmi 66
Kāmika 92, 103, 104, 111, 113
Kāmikāgama 102, 103
Kanchi 2, 3, 36, 41, 42, 60, 114, 142, 147, 154, 157, 160, 161, 167, 178, 180, 187-189, 191, 194, 206-208
Kānchipuram 7, 36, 38, 56, 190, 207, 211, 216, 217
Kanchi Temple 155
Kaṇḍika 53
Kandiyur 178
Kandiyur temple 177
Kaṇḍālī 66
Kanjuka 38
Karma 63
Kantuka 41
Kanyā 39, 51, 55, 57, 61, 62, 66
Kanya Bhagavati 193
Kanyakas 123
Kanyakumari 2, 40, 114
Kanyakumari temple 114, 193
Kanyāpūja 11
Kapāla 19, 38, 54, 58, 62, 96, 122, 130, 136, 165, 176, 184, 185, 189, 202, 204
Karaikkal 201
Karaikkudi 172
Karālī 123
Kāraṇa 103
Kāraṇḍama 49, 108, 111-113, 119, 161, 162
Karanagananāthas 31
Karaṇḍamakuta(s) 112, 115, 139, 140, 209
Karma 52, 60, 75, 84, 90, 91
Karma Kānda 107
Karmānta Jñānanta 106
Karmavāda 93
Karmāvaṇī 91
Karishani 51
Karnataka 210
Karshapa 94
Karu 25
Karur 3
Karvet Nagar 208
Kasi 198
Kastūri 61
Kafaka 61, 184
Katakamudra 114, 115, 163
Kaṭapūtas 129
Kaṭi 143, 170
Kaṭihasta 156, 158, 178, 182, 188
Katīsūtra 38
Kattiyakkrar 196
Kaṭvāṅga 96, 186, 209
Katvangadhvaṇa 189
Kātyāyāni 43, 44, 46, 123
Katyāyāni pūja 43
Katyāyāni vrata 44
Kauberi 127
Kaumāri 24, 125, 173, 203
Kausika silk 30
Kavaca 55
Kāveri 16
Kaveri-pumpaṭṭinam 15
Kaviccakravartī 29
Kavi Rakshasa 29
Kāvya 22
Kāya 19
kāya Sādhana 48
Kedāra 47
Kendī 133
Kerala 12, 191, 204
Keralaite impact 13
Kesabhara 185
Kevala 111, 112
khodga 30
Khadgini 117
khatvanga 189
Kilachchur 216
Kilaiyūr 176, 177, 191
Kilanadigal 193
kinkints 186
Kirana 103
Kirāta 202
Kirata sculpture 203
Kirāti 159
kiriṣa makuta 61, 103, 203, 204

- Kilim* 60
Kodambakkam 68
Koṭu 20
Kodumbalur 182
Kodumdi 192
Kolai 7
Kolar 186
Komaravarman Tribuvana Chakravartin 224
Kongu king 15
Konrai 12
Koppattu Parant 23
Kopperunjinga 184, 185
Koṭṭavai 4, 6-7, 25
Korravai nilai 6, 7
Korravankudi 86
Kosa 117
koshta devatas 185
Koṭikapattu 41
Koṭikkal maṇḍapa 147, 151
Krama 111
Krishna 30, 43
Krishnaraya maharaja 218
Kṛthikā nakshatra 119
Kṛtya 50, 53, 54, 56, 70, 75, 80, 84, 88, 90, 95, 104
Kṛtyā mārga 95
kṛtyāpāda 11, 105, 106
Kṛtyasadhana 213
kṛtya Śakti 56, 63, 70, 78, 79, 87, 95, 99, 110, 150, 180, 185, 199
Kshatriyasimha Pallavesvaragham 154
Kshetramuṇḍi, 137
Kshetrapāla 125, 131, 220
Kuccara Kuṭisai 149
Kūḍal-Sangama-Parant 23
Kudanuza 201
Kulagiris 28, 32
Kulottunga 23-25, 28, 206, 221
Kulottunga Chola I, 25, 181, 184, 214
Kulottunga II 29, 35, 183
Kulottunga III 162, 190
Kulsi (s) 20, 184, 201
Kumaraguruparar 92, 197, 198
Kumāra Skanda 65
Kumari 7, 10, 41, 55
Kumaritturaiyan 193
Kumbakonam 178, 180, 182
Kumbha (s) 128, 129, 131
Kumbhābhisheka 107, 119
Kumbhi 127
Kumbodara 121
Kumuda 123
Kunḍa (s) 51, 123
Kunḍala (s) 37, 53, 54, 153, 200
Kunḍalini 25, 49, 51, 52, 62, 85, 91, 123, 128
Kunḍalini śakti 33
Kundalini Yoga 59
Kundikā 61, 140, 166
Kunrakkudi 189
Kunravar 9
Kūrecha of dharbha 108
Kurmasila 128
Kurumbai 38
Kuruntogai 4
Kuṛuthippali 10
Kūshmāṇḍa Durga 134
Kushmāṇḍa purāna 34
Kuṭi 26
Kuṭila 66
Kuṭilā yōgini 66
Kuvalai flower 8
Laghima siddhi 94
Lāja homa 114
Lakshmi 9, 31, 35, 53, 58, 151-153, 160, 161, 166-169, 178, 180, 181, 209, 213
Lakshminarayana Perumal temple 217
Lakshmi Narayanasvamin temple 217
Lākula 103
latā sādhamā 49, 51
Lalita 103
Lalitāṅkura Pallavesvaragham 143
Lalitā Sahasranāma 18, 159, 166, 188, 213
Latita Tripurasundari 164
Līlāsukapriya 159
Linga 108, 110, 113
Lingamudra 111
Linga pīṭhā 109
Lingaprathishṭhā 108
Lingodbhava 172
Lokāpalas 123, 171
maddala 201, 202
Madhu 33, 52, 58, 72, 154
Madhupānā 67
Madirai-konda Kopparakasara Panmar 224
Madras 68, 170
Madras Museum 17, 182, 190, 192, 211
Madurai 2, 8, 13, 19, 20, 22, 39, 89, 173, 194, 195, 198, 199, 206, 207
Madurai temple 197, 203
Madura 8, 92, 215

Madurapāti 9
Madurapati Dēvatā 8
Mahabalipuram 120, 133, 140
Mahābhārata 22
Mahābila 207
Mahādeva 32, 134
Mahadevan 3fn
Mahādēvi 53, 54, 69, 98, 168
Mahādurga 8
Mahākāla 83, 203
Mahā Kālī 69, 83
Mahakallatu Padariyanna Sattanur Nangal 224
mahakasa 198
Mahā Lakshmi 8, 41, 54, 61, 69, 168, 203, 204
Mahalingesvamin temple 220
Mahāmandalesvara 223 mahāmaṇḍapa 166, 178
mahāmantras 106
mahāmāyā 53, 70, 85, 91, 103
Mahāmēru 30, 31
mahāpasu 130
mahā prāsāda 164, 166
Maharashtra 48
Mahasimha 148
Mahā Sarasvatī 8, 69, 168
Mahat 81, 85
Mahātantras 102
Mahā-Tripurasundari 191
Maha Vishnu 219
Mahāvratin 33
Mahāvratī sanyāsin 37
Mahendra 143, 145, 157, 187
Mahendra I 41, 146, 147
Mahendravarman 142, 144, 188-190, 212
Mahendravatī 143
Mahesvara 70, 91
Maheśvari 24, 58, 124, 141, 185, 203, 204
Mahimā 94
Mahisha 44, 53, 75, 122, 144, 148, 150, 151, 154, 170, 172, 178, 188
Mahishamardini 156, 186, 187
Mahishamardini cave 154
Mahishāsura 12, 20, 39, 147, 148, 153, 174
Mahishasura rock 148
Mahishasuramardini 145, 152, 153, 162, 163, 179, 211
Mahishāsuramardini cave 125
Matihuna 24, 27, 33, 51, 56, 72
Makara 149, 180
makarakundalas 31, 209
makara tornas 26, 150, 152

Makuṣa 104
Makuṣagama 104
malaimagal mahan 4
Malāti mādhyava 17
Malayadhvaja Pāṇḍya 39, 199
Malikkaffur 194
Mālinī 91
Mallappan 195
Mamallapuram 7, 26, 132, 144-149, 151, 152, 154, 167, 188
Mamandur 143
Māmāya 51
māmsa 33, 52, 128, 208
Mānakkenjārar 37
Manas 19
mānasā-tīrtha 31
Mandagappattu 143
maṇḍala 18, 153
maṇḍapa 112, 116, 118, 183, 188, 196, 200, 203, 211
Mandaparūpinj 161
Mandūkapaḍu 158
Mangadu 170 mangalasūtra 9 māngalyas 25
Mānickavācaka 42, 43
Maṇimakalai 15, 17-19
Mani pūroka 106
Mānikkavācaka 44, 45
Māṇimangalam 211
Manimekhalai 7
Manjula 167
Manmatha 85
Manonmani 43, 51, 53-55, 60, 66, 79, 108, 116, 118, 140, 150, 203, 204 mantra(s) 1, 13, 51-53, 57, 59, 60, 80, 94, 105, 106, 109, 196 mantra adhvas 122
Mantrakalā 80
mantra Nārādāya Svāha 59
Mantra-pāṣana 94
Mantrarūpi 67
mantra sādhanas 33-35
Mantra Sādhana 59
Mantra Śakti 59 mantra Sarīra 105 mantra suddhi 121
Mantravāda 93, 94
Mantra Vāmins 94
Manu 83
manushyaloka 211

- Māparā 53
Marajiñāna Sambandar 77
Mārana 94
Maran Sadaiyan 213
Maravarman 214
Mārgali 44
Mārgali pūja 44
Mari Amman (temple) 202, 223
Marichi Samhitā 119, 151
Mārkaṇḍeyopūrāṇa 9, 208 Māsakti 51
māsha 182
Masati-stones 210
Mātanga 89
Matangisvara 188
Matas 129
Matha 65, 68
mātribhaktas 128
Mātrītantra 125
Matsya 33
Mattavilāsa 189
maunabali 130
Māvratā muṇḍi 37
Māyā 51-53, 56, 57, 63, 69, 75, 78, 89, 91, 94, 95
Mayāna Vasiṇi 17, 33
Māyā śakti 45, 55
Māyavāda 89
Māyan 30
Māyoḷ 30
Mayūra bali 26
Medieval epigraphs 22
Meikāṇḍadeva 71, 87
Makalai 7
Melacheri 188
melavādyā 196
Melappaluvum 162
Menaka 167
Meykandār 77
Meru 16, 18, 27
meru chakra 18
Meykandār 77
Meykardadeva 74
Meykaṇḍa Sāstras 73, 86
Mīnākshi 2, 39, 195, 197
Mīnākshi amman 198
Mīnākshi Amman Irattaimanimalai 198
Mīnākshi Amman Kuram 198
Mīnākshi Amman Temple 214
Mīnākshi shrine 198, 203
Mīnākshi temple 173, 194
Misravāma 93
Misravāmi 95
Mohintz 30, 31, 33, 53, 62, 70, 81, 85, 209, 219
Mohiniṁdya 53
Mokshaloka 30 monumental art 1-2
Mortimer Wheeler 3fn
Moṭi 5, 27, 31
mrga 170, 190
Mṛgasirā 42, 43
Mṛgendra Āgama 89, 105
Mudra (s) 21, 33, 37, 52, 54, 55, 66, 165
Mukhabimba 103
mukhamandapa 155, 156
Mukkokilamadigal 193
Muktesvara 188
Muktesvara Temple 156
mukti 95, 112, 113
Mukundanayanar 188
Mūlādhāra 55, 57, 106, 128
mūlamantra 108, 117, 126
Mūlar 52
Mulasthana 195, 197
munda 186
Mundakanni Amman 202
munda yagnopavīta 176, 177
Munnur 211
Muruga 25, 28
Muruganatha temple 187, 216
Murugan 6
Murray, S. Rajan 20fn
Mūrti murtisvarī 110
Nābhi sthāna 56
Naccinārkinīyār 4, 6, 6fn, 22
Nāchchiyār Tirukkāmakkottattū Aludalya Nachchiyar 215, 216
Nachchiyar Udaiyandar 222
Nachiyar temple 173
Nāda 54, 56, 57, 62, 63, 81, 91, 128
Nādakārika 91
Nādānta 54
Nādavaḍini 66
Nāga (s) 36, 61, 128, 134
nāgapāśa 54
Nagappayya 199
Nagaradevatā 7-9, 17
Nagesvara temple 178
Nairrti 127
Naishtikavratins 105
Nakkam Korri 174
Nakshatras 35
Nallanduvanār 44
Nambi Anḍar Nambi 63

Namaḥ 53
 Nandagopa 121
 Nandi 73, 187, 201
 Nandikampa Chaturvedimangalam 216
 Nandini 91
 Nandi-saṅgha 50
 Nandiverman Pallava 213
 Nannavudaiyasvamin 216
 Narada 201
 Naralokavira 183
Nāraṁ 51, 53
 Narasimha 211
 Narasimha I, 146
 Narasingaraya maharāya 218
Nārāyaṇa 97, 119
 Nārāyaṇi 54, 55
Narṇai 44
nāshikas 25
 Nāṭakasāla 196
 Nāṭarāja 36, 45, 81, 101, 184
Nāṭha 71, 72
 Nāṭha cult 64, 65
Nāṭha school 49, 50
Nāṭha sect 48, 49
Nāṭha Yogis 48
 Nava Durgā 132, 133
Navākshari 59, 158
Navākshari Cakra 52 navākshari Śakti 60
 Navami 134
Nava Śakti 51, 56
Navratnamālīkā 159
Nāvakkaraṣi (Vākdevi) 60
 Nāyeki 73
Neṇṇaivāḍai 4
 Neṇṇaivāḍaiyam 45, 189
 Nellaiyappar temple 215, 216
 Nepal 48
 Nēpalā 47, 48
netra (eye) mantras 62
 Nidrādevi 154
Nidraruṇi 154
Nikumbhi 127
 Nilakanta Dikshita 197-199
 Nilakanta Sastri, K.A. 3fn
Nili 7, 51, 55
Nimittakāraṇa Parināmarāda 89
nirādhāra 71
 Nirāmayadeva 92
Nirguna 66
nirmatya 33
 Nisācari 51, 55

Nisumbha 20
 Nisumbhasūdanī 175, 176
Nisvāsa 89, 103
Nitya 70
nityapūja 15
Nityatṛptatva 98
nityōtsavaḥ 15
Nivṛtthi 91
Nivṛtthi Kāla 106
 Nolamba 186
 North Arcot 218, 220, 222, 223
 Nrittamurti Siva 114
Nṛttasvārī 13
nūpura 31, 53, 209
nyāsa 52

 Olakkannasvara temple 155
Oṁkārasvarūpi 62
Oṁkāri 51
 Osuramma shrine 222
 Oṭṭakkūttam 23, 28, 29, 181, 209

Paccālikarpūram 61
 Pachaiyammam 202
Pādabandha 149
Pada devatas 158
Pādādi kṣānta varṇana 27
pādas 104
Padavanyāsa 156
Paddhati 122
Padirrupattu 5
Padma 118
Padmanāga 36, 208
Padmanidhi 31
Pādya 121
Paisāchi 130
Pāla 28
 Palaiyakkarars 197
 Palaiyarai temple 178
 Palaiyōl 4
 Palayappattu 196
palikkoḍai 11
 Pallakku chokkar 196
 Pallamangai 178
 Pallava 132, 171
 Pallavaditya 188
 Pallava Nripatunga 191
 Pallava ruler 37, 40, 41
 Pallava temple 170
 Pallava territory 211
 Paluvettaraiya 176
 Panamalai 156, 187, 188

- Pañcakritya 99, 101
Pancanana Sastri 89
Pāncarātha 122
Pancaratanas 110
Pancāvarana 106
Pāñcharanga 20
Pancha chayana 28
Panchākshara 36, 50
Pancha makāras 24, 27, 37, 49, 51
Pāncha Pāṇḍava ratha 149
Panchaprāta 28
Pancharatha temple 2
Pandipperumal 75
Pandit M. Raghava Iyengar 43
Pāṇḍyas 42, 172, 173
Pāṇḍya country 39
Pandya rulers 3, 41, 45, 193
Pāṇḍya rock-cut monuments 172
Pāṇḍyan 173
Pāṇḍyan rock-cut cave 172
Panguni festival 68
Pannār (moli) amman 68
Panniru Pāṇḍiyāl 23
Parā 133
Parā devatā 32, 150, 168, 184
Parajñāna 103
Paramāgamam 93
Paramēśvara 78, 98, 103, 144, 146
Paramesvara Pallava 212
Paramesvaravarman 188
Paramātmā 97
Paramaśakti 100
Paramēśvari 31, 33, 95, 184
Paramēśvari Śakti 93
Paranayogin 16
Paraṇi(s) 22, 29, 181
Paraṇi Literature 22, 23
Paranjoti 39, 40
Parankunram 173
Parantaka (I) 45, 182, 220
Parapaksha 77
Parapari 66
Paraprakrītī 51, 53, 54, 55-58, 60, 62, 78, 88, 95, 101, 102, 106
Parā Śakti 99, 106
Parasiva 62
Parasu 61, 62, 122, 170, 185, 188, 190, 203, 207
Paratantrāvatāram 93
Paratatvarāga 93
Parāvidyā 51 paricharakas 221 parijanas 197
Pārijāta 34
Paripāḍai 44
Paripurā 53
Paripūranasiddhi 92
Parishadevatas 116
Parivāra 112, 118
Parivāradevas 220
Parivāradevatas 117-119, 131, 158, 161
Parivāra maṇḍala 161
Parivattam 196
Parthivendravarman 168
Pārvati 16, 21, 24, 30, 143, 144, 160, 166, 173, 174, 183, 187, 188, 190, 192, 210
Pāśa 16, 53, 54, 58, 61, 91, 95, 122, 133-136, 165, 174, 204
Pāshanavāda 89
Pasu 95, 130
Paśupati 98, 103, 128, 188
Paśupatisvara temple 224
Pāṣaka 37, 133
pativratā-dharma 31
patrakuṇḍala(s) 150, 209
Paṣṭābhishheka 196, 197
Pattanas 120
Pattana pravasa 196
Pattani 13
Pattu Paṣṭu 3, 4
Pauskkara 89
Paushtika 121
Pāykalaiippāvat Pādarpaṇi 13 payodhara 31
Pennagadam 74
Pertyanachchiyar 222
Pertiyapurāṇam 35, 46, 47, 63, 86, 186, 202, 208
Periyavaceam Pillai 43
Perumbarrappuliyur Nambi 39, 40
Perumbidugu Muttaraiya 213
Perunpalavur 160, 162
Piḍāri 66, 149, 219, 221
Pidari amman temple 222
Pidari Idaimalai-Nangao 220
Pidari Koll 221
Piḍāri maras 169
Pidari Patti 224
Piḍāri rathas 149
Piḍāri temple 149, 219, 221, 224
Piḍāriyār 184, 224
Piḍāriyar Alagiya nachchiyar 214, 222

Pidari Yogirunda-Paramesvari 220

Pilaiyarpatti 144, 189

Pillaittamil work 198

pinḍi 28

Pinglā 49

Piravatana 188

Piravatana temple 161

Pisḍas 128, 130

Pishtapasu 130

plika 56, 57, 111, 112

plirs 10

Poleramman temple 222

Porchunnam 45

Prabha 123

Pradhāna 35, 114

Pradhānakumbha 112

Pradoshamurti 114

prakāra 111, 157, 220

Prakaraja 94

Prakṛiti 119

Prakṛimāyā 69

prāna 60

Prāna prātishṭa 58

Prana Śakti 61

Prapava 53

Prānāyāma 106

Prāpti 94

Prasāda (s) 164, 196

Prasanna Durgadevi 218

Prasanna Ekkaladeviammal 223

Pratama-Pushpini 129

Pratibandha 147

pratishṭā Kalā 106

Pravṛtta 78

prayoga 165

prayoga cakra 150, 163, 164

pruyoga sūla 201, 202

pre-Christian era 3

Preta 184, 185

Pudukkottai 172

Pudumandapa 195, 207

Pūja 36, 95, 129

Punarpuja 197

Punca suddhis 121

Punjai 178

Punugu 61

Purānas 30, 34, 67

Pūranahuti 119

Puranic 16, 100

Puranic legends 23

Puranic themes 23

Puṣapporul Venbāmalai 6

Pūrṇa Śakti 52, 56

purushārthas 100

Purusha tattava 158

Pushkalāvātī Devata 8, 16

Pushpendra Kumār 49

Pūṇas 130

Rāga 76

Rājādhirāja II 68

Rajakkalmangalam 173

Rājarāja 86, 178, 180, 183, 193, 217

Rajaraja I 160, 181, 182, 192

Rajarāja II 180, 181

Rajaraja III 74

Rājarājapuram 181

Rājarājesvari 53, 54, 174

Rajarajesvari Durga 174

Rājasimha 5, 41, 145-147, 149, 155, 187, 188, 213

Rājasimhesvara temple 160

Rajendra (Chola) 68, 186, 193, 216, 224

Rājendra (Chola) I 175, 181

Rājendra Chola II, 23

raksha 31

Rākshasas 16, 20, 128

Ramā 121

Ramachandra Dikshitar, V.R. 7fn

Ramanathaswami temple 177

Rāmānuja 2, 97

Rāmānuja mandapa 152, 187

Rambha 33

Ramesvaram 177

Ranabhatravī 66

Ranatungakālī 66

Ranganātha cave 144

Rangapidariyar 220

rasa 128

Rāsi cakra 57

rāsīs 57

ratnasimhāsana 196

Raudra Āgamas 103

Raudra Śakti 81

Raudri 43, 81, 123, 203

Rauravāgama 74, 92, 103, 108, 113, 118

Ravan Padi cave 185

Renukaniba temple 223

Rishis (rshi) 80, 159, 167 river Kaveri 176

Ṛtus 57

- Rudra 51, 53, 57, 62, 75, 93, 98
 Rudra Durgā 133
Rudrām 56, 128, 181, 184, 185
 Rudra Yogini 28
Rupini 91

Sabha mandapa 167
Sacchidānandarūpa 97
Sādākyas 78
 Sadāśiva 31, 53, 54, 62, 63, 70, 75, 79, 108, 212
 Sadasiva Bhatt 197
 Sadāsiva Nāyaki 60
 Sādhaka 22, 59, 72, 77, 83
Sādhaki 66
Sādhana 35
 Sadhana Sastra 76
Sadira 197
 Sadyojāta 128
Saharra 111
Sahasrapadmā 128 sahasrāra 51, 55
Sailaputri Durga 134
 Saint Iyarpohai 37
 Saint Śundara 35
 Saint Sundaramūrti 35
 Śaiva 49, 73, 77, 97, 101, 103, 132, 134
 Śaiva Āgamas 102, 103, 126
Śaiva cult 37
 Śaiva doctrine 2, 68, 74, 77
 Śaiva faith 63, 89, 93
Śaiva rites 105
 Śaiva saints 36, 57
 Śaiva school 70, 84, 97, 102
 Śaiva Siddhānta 69, 74, 76, 77, 79, 80, 89, 181
 Śaiva Siddhānta doctrine 86
 Śaiva Siddhānta philosophy 180
Śaiva Siddhānta Sāstra 33
 Śaiva Siddhānta school 92
Śaiva tantras 119
 Śaiva tradition 35
Saivavāda 89
 Śaivism 38, 40, 41, 43, 46, 47, 101, 207
 Śaivite 12, 40, 43, 50, 64, 84, 206, 211
 Śaivite devotees 37
 Śaivite faiths 44
 Śaivite images 173
 Śaivite literature 40
 Śaivite saints 35, 40
 Sakatāsura 12
 Sākini (s) 35, 129
 Sakala Kalavallimalai 198

Sakalamūrti 144
 Sākta 33, 76
 Śākta (s) 2, 7, 11, 24, 38, 49, 52, 53, 56, 65, 66, 78, 83, 84, 94, 96, 105
 Śākta beliefs 24
Śākta canons 1
 Śākta concepts 66
 Śākta cult 1, 2, 10, 11, 18, 22, 23, 27, 29, 34, 38, 39, 62, 63, 66, 67, 145, 198
 Śākta customs 23, 28
Śākta leanings 65
 Śākta philosophy 7
 Śākta principle 76
 śākta religion 24, 29
 Śākta school 51, 89, 95
Śākta Tantras 50, 82, 84, 95
Śākta tattvas 11
 Śākta text 51
 Śākta tradition 28, 48, 51
Śākta yantrapāsana 60
 Śakti (s) 4, 8, 11, 12, 20, 24, 35, 38, 39, 41-46 49, 51, 52, 54-56, 58, 59, 62, 63, 65, 69, 72, 73, 75-77, 79, 81, 83, 87, 88, 90, 91, 93-95, 97, 98, 100, 123, 135, 138, 141, 154, 160, 161, 170, 179-181, 185, 190, 191, 211-214
Śakti akshara 57
 Śakti concept 100
 Śakti cult 1, 16, 18, 29, 38, 43, 48, 71, 102, 145, 172, 175, 193
Śaktidvaya 115
Śakti images 15
Śaktimān 100
Śaktimatva 98
Śakti nīpātā 95
Śakti Pratimas 114
Śaktirupadvayam 115
Śakti svarūpā 94
Śakti tattva 91
Sāla 185
salaka 134
Salvai 197
 Salvankuppam 146, 147, 155, 213
Samādhi 57
Samapāda 112
Samaranīri 66
 Samarl 7
 Sambandar 40, 64
Sāmbavi 51, 56
Sāmbavi maṇḍala Cakra 52
sambha 60
Sāmbhava dīkshās 84

- Sāmbhava Sāstra* 83
 Śambhu 91, 98
samhāra lokayugānta 32
samhitā texts 92
Samkalpa nirākarāṇa 89
Samundesvari 224
Sāndhara passage 192
Sāndhu 58
 Sangam age 3, 23
 Sangam literature 3, 22
 Sangam period 5, 22, 26
 Sangam works 3, 4, 22, 44
 Sangamesvara temple 216
Sankalpa 70
Sankalpa Sṛishṭi 69, 76
 Śankara 97
Sankarī 7, 66, 128
sankha 7, 54, 61, 119, 120, 182
 Sanskrit tradition 74
 Sanskrit work 2, 17
Santāna 103
Sāntika 121
 Santi sakti 180
 Sāntiyātita Sakti 180, 181
Sāntyāyita Kalā 106
Sānyasa 35
sanyāsin 37, 38
sapa-matrikas 220
sapla pātālas 31
 Saptamātas 12, 20, 24, 93, 126, 127, 170, 177, 186
Saptamādikkal 169
 Sarasvatī 9, 24, 29, 31, 35, 53, 54, 61, 69, 131, 160, 161, 166, 168, 173, 178, 180, 181, 184, 185, 198, 209
 Sarva 32, 98
 Sarvabhūta-dāmani 43, 110
Sarvajña Karī 98
Sarvajñānottara 89
Sarvajñatva 98
Sarva siddhānta Vivāka 96
Sarvokta 103
 Sasi 134
Sasini 128
Śāstra (s) 29, 90, 91, 131
sāstric 2
Sāstric nature 46
Sāstric rules 14
 Sastric tradition 74
 Sastric works 86
satagni 122
Sata Ratna Sangraha 89
 Sati 210, 211
 Sattan Ganapathi 174
 Sattanur 47, 63
Sattārūpam 102
saumya 52
saumya deities 2
Saumyamurti 120
 Sauram 145
Sauramāna 44
 Savitri 31, 106
 Sea-shore temple 154
 Sekkilār 35, 36, 46-48, 63, 86, 181
 Selliamman temple 216, 219
 Selvi 7
 Sendali 213
 Sangamedu 186
 Senguttuvan 13-15
 Senniyan Viduthi 182
 Seturaman, S. V. 66, 67
Shanmatha 145
śhodasopacāra dīpārādhana 169
 Siddha (s) 103, 133, 154 siddhānganas 167
Siddhānta bōdha 92
 Siddhānta doctrine 73, 82, 89
Siddhānta dīpika 92
Siddhānta rahasya 92
Siddhānta Samuccaya 92
 Siddhānta School 77, 84
Siddhantavāmi 95
Siddhi (s) 61, 62, 94
Siddhidhātṛī 61
Siddhiyār 85, 87
śikhā 37, 55
śikhāmantra 112
Sikhari Pallavesvara grham 188 silambu 7, 8, 54, 64
Śilpachārva 14
Śilapadhikāram 9, 11-13, 16, 20, 28, 149, 150 śilpa literature 2 silpa sāstras 61
silpa texts 42
Simha Durga 133, 154
Simhāsana 134, 174
 Simhavahini 123, 160
 Simhavarma 142
Sindhuraparipurā 51
Sindura 140

- Singavarman 144
stra pushpas 33
 Sir John Woodroffe 1, 59, 76fn, 77fn, 82fn, 83fn, 85fn
 Siromantra 62
Srīshī 79
Srīrupānāruppaḍai 4
 Siruttōṇḍar 37
śisu 157
Śisukundala 179
 Śiva 1, 7, 8, 11, 12, 16, 20, 21, 24, 27-33, 36, 39, 40, 42-46, 48, 50, 53, 54, 56, 62, 63, 67, 69, 74-78, 80-83, 85-87, 91, 95, 97, 98, 101, 102, 110, 111, 113-115, 117, 118, 120, 123, 137, 147, 150, 152, 154-156, 158, 160, 166, 169, 171, 173, 174, 176, 183, 185, 188-195, 197-199, 201, 202, 205, 212-214
Śiva Āgamas 33, 85, 93
Śivabhakata (s) 37, 44
 Śiva cave 152
Śivā darśhana 56
Śivadharmā 104
Śiva-dīkṣa 77
Śivādvalita 82, 97, 99, 198
Śivādvalī 82
Śivagnānabodham 71
Śivagni 108
Śivāgrayogi 77, 78
Śivāgrayogin 80, 82, 84, 85
Śivajī Kṣhātra 208
Śivajñāna 73, 80, 90
Śiva Jñānabodha 73, 74
Śivajñāna Siddhi 76, 77
Śivajñāna Śiddhīyār 83
Śiva Jñāna Sūtra 75
Śivajñāna Svāmī 91
Śivajñānayogi 77
Śivakāmi 87, 88, 167
 Śivakāmi Ammai Irattaimanimalai 198
 Śivakāmisundarī 183
 Śivakāmi temple 184
Śivāksharas 57
Śiva Kumbha 108, 113
Śivalinga 108, 172, 174, 188, 190, 211
Śivamahādeva 33
Śiva mantra 113
Śivaparipurānī shrine 222
Śivaprakāśar 89
Śivapūja 50, 80
Śivapūjasāram 93
Śivārkamanīdīpika 97
Śivasādhakhyaprasādam 93
Śiva Sādākhya 79
Śiva Śakti 70, 78, 79, 85, 90, 140
Śivasamvada 89
Śiva sanyāsin 38
 Śiva shrine 203
Śivasristi 78, 79
Śiva svarūpa 79
Śivatattva 63, 68
 Śiva temple 17, 68, 74, 117, 119, 169, 177, 185, 187, 195, 204, 208, 209, 224
Śtrayoga 73
 Sivayōgi 72
 Siyamangalam 143
 Skanda 38, 43, 64, 65, 67, 123, 187, 189
Skanda Durga 134
 Skandasena 143
 Skandayāmala 134
smriti 100
snapana 12
 Sokkanathasvamin temple 215
 Somaditya 188
 Somanāthadeva 65
 Somarasa 46
Somasiddhanta 69
 Somaskanda 188, 189, 191
 Somaskanda bronze 190
 Somaskanda image 187, 190
sopana bhūta 168
soubhāgya 31
Soubhāgya Karttī 31
soumya devata 184
Soundaryalaharī 2
 South Arcot 217, 218, 221, 223, 224
 Southern India 1
Sparsāhuti 113
Śrāddha ceremonies 10
 Sri Buthalaveeramavarmar 215
Srī Cakra 57, 60
 Sridevi 30, 31, 181, 211
 Sri Kali 189
Srikamakotta puram 220
Śrīkṛpā 97-101
Śrīkṛpā Bhāṣya 97
 Śrīkṛpā Sambhu 198
Srīmad Bhāgāvata 43
 Srinivasan, K.R. 143-145, 147
 Srirangadeva 223
Srīshī 60
 Sri Tatvanidhi 134
 Srivāikuntam 197

- Srivaṣṣa* 210
Srīvidya 54, 56, 57
Srngārāmohini 208
Sruk 111
Śruti 100-102
sthalapurāṇas 92, 194, 208
Sthambhana 94
sthānikas 195
stotra (s) 11, 94
strīdāna 30
Subrahmanya 24, 27, 32, 64, 65, 152, 160, 167, 172, 173, 188, 189, 198, 203, 220
Subramanya Pillai, K. 87fn
Subramanya Temple 215
Sūddhā 51
Suddhamāya 69, 78, 81
Suddha Tattvas 75
Sudra (s) 84, 138
Suhodayā 51
Sukhaparasundari 51
Sūkshama 103
Sūkta 121
sūla 7, 16, 38, 54-56, 61, 62, 96, 122, 130, 134, 165
Sūli 5, 7
Sūlini 51, 123
Sumarumadhya sringastha 158
Sumbha Nisumbhasūdamī 179
Sumeru 213
Sundara Chola 193
Sundramūrti 38, 41, 63, 64, 206, 207
Sundaranātha 46-48
Sundara Pandya 111, 215
Sundara Pandya Gopura 182
Sundarar 41
Sundaravarada temple 168
Sundaresvara 197, 199
Suprabheda 103, 111, 115
Suprabhedāgama 112, 113, 119
Sūrya 24, 30, 32, 35, 54, 56, 145
Suryanarayana Sastri, S. 97 suta saṁhita 92
sūtra (s) 6, 23, 37, 74-76, 83, 88, 104
Svaccanda Bhairava tantra 125
Svādhishṭhāna 106
Svapaksha 77
svargabhoga 69
Svatantratva 98
Svāyambhūva 89, 103, 119
Svayambu Cakra 60
Svayamkradhārīa temples 118
Svetāranya Māhātmya 92
Swāhā 53
Swaminatha Iyer, U.V. 4, 6fn, 7fn, 12fn, 14fn, 15, 16fn, 20fn, 28fn, 30fn, 32, 34fn, 39, 40fn, 198
Syāmālā 66, 203, 204
Syāmala dandaka 167
tādāna hasta 164
tādanamudra 203
Tai 44
Takkolam 169
Talagirisvara 187, 188
Talapustaka 197
tālī 9
Tamil 2, 3, 15, 40, 43, 49, 51, 58, 64, 66, 71, 73, 74, 92, 172
Tamilnad 129, 149, 167, 212
Tamil country 2, 6, 7
Tamil grammer 6
Tamil literature 1, 2, 9, 11, 24, 198
Tamil land 15, 40, 48, 194
Tamil Nadu 2, 9, 11, 15, 20, 26, 33, 47, 74, 210
Tamil poems 201
Tamil sutras 75
Tamil texts 1
Tamil works 19, 20, 30, 39
Tāṇḍava 202
Tāṇḍava Sakshini 166
Tanjāpuri 175
Tanjore, 160, 161, 166, 175-178, 180, 183, 189, 192, 206, 213-214, 220, 221
Tanjore Art 182
Tanjore Art Gallery 177, 191
Tanjore Gopuras 180
Tantric Bhāvana 54
Tantric cult 1, 46, 64, 86, 181, 185
Tantric gāyatri 84
Tantric rites 81, 86
Tāntric school 86
Tantric texts 89
Tantric worship 86
Tantras 1, 46, 47, 49, 50, 52, 56, 57, 59, 94, 102, 104
Tantrakalā 80
Tantra Sāstrā 52, 62, 84
tapas 16, 41
Tapōvesha 50
tarjani mudra 133
Taṭātagai 39
Tatparā 54
Tattvas 60, 62, 91, 111

- Tattva Tattvesi* 130
Tattvāmṛta 92
Tatvanāyakti 51, 60
Tavakkōḍi 36
 Thanjavur 34, 46
Thirtthondar antati 63
 Thiruchendur 198
 Thiruchi 169
 Thiruchirappalli 141, 145
 Thirugokarnam 172
 Thirukaliṟṟuppaḍiyār 72, 73
 Thirukkalukkunram 188
 Thirukkodavūr 72
 Thirumalaibhupati 18
 Thirumalai Nayak 92, 173, 197, 201, 203, 218
Thirumandiram 62, 63, 71, 84, 158, 180, 191 thirumanjana 196
 Thirumeyyam 144, 189
 Thirumōlan 64
 Thirumōlar 55, 56, 62, 63
 Thirunallur 189
 Thirunelveli 142, 172
 Thirupparankuram 173, 189, 201, 202
 Thirupparankuram temple 166
 Thiruppugal 64, 66
 Thiruttani 169, 170
Thiruttondatthai 63
 Thiruvadigai 189, 191, 204
 Thiruvadigai temple 183
 Thiruvaduturai 178
 Thiruvaiyaru 185
 Thiruvakkarai 176
 Thiruvālangādu 175, 190, 191
 Thiruvaliswaram 69
 Thiruvanaikkaval 180
 Thiruvanaikkoil 182
 Thiruvani kudal 216
 Thiruvannamalai 64, 74
 Thiruvannamalai temple 65
 Thiruvarangam 171
 Thiruvarvur 178
Thiruvendiyār 71-73
 Thiruverkadu 190
 Thiruvisalur 72
 Thiruvisalur Uyyavandadeva 72
 Thiruvorniyur 68
 Tiger cave 148 tigers' skin 7 tilaka 34
 Tillaivama 185
Tillaiyanam Uḍaiya 184
 Tillarenda Nandi 213
 Tirachirappalli 41, 219
tirobhāva 98, 99
Tirthayātra 131
 Tirtamalai 5, 171
Tiru Ambala cakra 52
 Tiruchender 215
Tirukkamakkottam 215
Tirukkamakkoṭṭa mudya Nachchiyar 214
Tirukkamakkottu Āludya Nāchchiyār 215
Tirukkāmakoṭṭa Mudaiya-Periya Nāchyar 214
 Tirukkalakkudi 214
 Tirukkurippu 36
Tirukkattalki Pattī-Bhātari 220
 Tirukkomesvara temple 219
Tirukkovaḷiyār 42
Tirumandiram 45-50, 52, 53
Tirumandiramālā 46
Tirumanyama 36
 Tirumōllar 46, 52
Tirumuṣai 35
 Tirumayandava temple 221
Tirumurugāṟṟuppaḍai 4
 Tirumuruganpundi 216
Tiruppāvai 43, 44
 Tirupparankunram 215
 Tirupparkadal Davar 219
Tirupparkadal Devar Bhātariyar (Bhātari) 221
 Tirupperuatura: 44
Tiruttoṇḍar purāṇam 35
Tiruvācakam 42, 46
Tiruvādavūrār purāṇam 44
 Tiruvāḍhturai 47
 Tiruvalandurai temple 220
 Tiruvaludisvara temple 218
 Tiruvannamalai 44
 Tiruvarur 38
Tiruvembārai 42, 45
Tiruviḷayāḍalpurāṇam 39
Tiruvidi-Nachchiyar 221
 Tiruvirattanesvara temple 221
Tolkāppiyam 6
tomara 122
toranas 123, 127
 Travancore 194
Trayimayī 119
 Tribal Custom 9
tribhanga 143-144
tribanga pose 178
 Tribuvanaackakravartin Rajarajadeva 217
 Tribuvana Kalasekara Deva 215

- Tribhuvanavartin Konerinmai Kondān 214, 215
 Tribhuvanam 182
 Tribhuvanam temples 206
 Trichirappalli 143
 Trichy 221
 trident 31
 Trimūla 46
 Trimurti cave 152, 188
 Trinelveḷi 197
 Tripura 21, 41, 53, 54, 66, 137, 164, 181, 191, 209
 Tripura Bhairavi 51, 54, 115, 165, 167, 191, 209
 Tripura-Bhairavi cult 59
Tripura Cakora 52, 52
 Tripura Durga 161
Tripurā māntra 55
 Tripurāntaka 115, 160, 177, 192, 192
 Tripurāntaka Siva 191
 Tripurasundari 41, 151, 179, 181, 191, 192
 Tripurāsura 20
 Tripuravijaya, 192
Trisūla 22, 38, 119, 190
Trisūlini 117
Tuḍi 34
Tuḍiāḍal 20
tula 25
Tulasī 21
Tunangai dance 22
tūnas 150
 Tungabhadra 26
tuvarai 7
 Tyagarāja temple 178

Uccāṭana 94
udayagiri 31
Udyukta 78
 Ugracandā 134
 Ugrasena 121, 129, 130
 Ukkal 211 ulā 29
Ulaka aravi 17
Ulkhāmukhi 118
ullelum 60
 Umā 5, 11, 21, 24, 45, 53, 58, 87, 121, 158, 167, 194, 212, 213
 Umāmahesvara 170, 173, 189, 190
 Umāparamesvari 30, 87, 183, 214
 Umāpati 87, 89, 90
 Umāpati Śiva 86
 Umāpati Śivam 89
 Uṇḍiyār 71
Upadesa 50
Upadesakalā 80 upāgamas 64, 87
upaparu 130, 131 upapitha 185 upāsana 16 upavita 37
 Uraniambalam 176
 Uravasi 33
 urbanisation 8
ūrdhvakesa 130, 179, 201, 202 ūrdhva tāṇḍava 155, 166, 201 ūruhasa 164
 Uttamachola 178
 Uttar Pradesh 48
 Utta sādhana 48
 Uyyavandadeva 2, 71, 72

 Vadagur 182
 Vadabhadrakali 175
Vadapalamandal 216
Vadavāyil 168
Vadavāyil chelvi 22, 151
Vadhani 111
 Vāgisa Paṇḍita 68, 69
 Vahana 127
 Vahuvalaya 31
Vaikarī 51, 53
Vaikarivāk 57
Vaikhānasa temples 2
Vaikhari 51
Vainḍavā 53
Vainḍhavi 51
 Vaikunta 47
 Vaishnava 132, 169
 Vaishnava Āgamas 102
 Vaishnava faith 1
Vaishnava Rites 121
 Vaishnavi 93, 99, 125, 181, 203, 204
Vaishnavi māyā 119
Vaishnavi Sakti 120
 Vaishnavite 40, 43, 44, 173
 Vaishnavite deities 211
 Vaishnavite temple 119
 Vaisya 130, 139
 vajra 34, 122, 126
Vajrābhishāna 127
Vākdevi 60
Vakrokti 199
Vāk sakti 91
 Vāma 43, 55, 72, 81, 82, 93, 95

- Vamāchāra* 46, 49, 52, 56
Vāmadeva 128
Vāmādvaita 82
Vānamārga 51
Vāmanapurāna 117
Vāmānkuśa 147
Vāma philosophies 96
Vāma school 64, 82, 89, 93, 96, 122
Vāmasiddhanta 93
Vāmatantras 94
Vāmins 94
Vanji 7
Vāna Nāḍi 8
Varada 61, 122, 134, 177, 185, 204
Varaguna II 42
Varāha 54, 151, 152, 174
Varāhamukhi 51
Varāha maṇḍapa 151
Vārāhi 24, 54, 125, 185
Vardini 108, 113, 118, 119, 123, 127
Varuna 25, 32, 35
Vārūni 127
Vasantaraya mandapa 203
Vashat 53, 94
Vasīatva 94
Vasīkarana cakra 60
vāstua devata 25
Vāstu puruṣa maṇḍala 158
Vāsūki 27
Vasundharā 41
Vāta 32, 38
Vātāpi 37, 146
Vaṣa Vṛikṣa 32
Vattelettu 5, 171
Vātula 103
Vaushaṭ 53, 94
Vāyavi 127
vāyu 35
Vāyu saṁhita 92
Vedas 11, 25, 33, 54, 55, 60, 80, 81, 85, 98, 103, 104, 107, 222
Vedagirisvara temple 188
Vedamantra-sākas 31
Vedanāyaki 31
Vedānta sūtras 97
Vedāntic 97, 101
Vedaranyesvara temple 220
Veda Tantri 66
Vedavakku Amman shrine 210
Vedic 104
Vedic chant 110
Vedic cult 107
Vedic hymns 1
Vedic mantras 80, 107
Vedic rites 107
Vedic school 81
Vedic yagñas 11, 52
Velliambalavana Tambran Swami 92
Velur 223
Vennainallur 74
Venkataraman, K.R. 204, 207-209
Veriyattu 6
vetala 130, 135
Veṭṭuvar 9
Vettuvavari 9
Veyanatoli-Nachchiyar 222
Vibhūti 27
Vibhūti pundra 204
Vidyā 53, 91
Vidyāpāda 104
Vidyā Śakti 63
Vidyā Tattva 91
Vidyavāsini 134
Vidyāsas 93
Vidyeshana 94
Vidyeshvaras 108
Vishnu Durga 133
Vishnumāyā 30, 120, 181
Vishnusūkti 121
Vishnu temple 120
Vismaya 164, 203
Vismayahasta 164
Vismaya mudra 176
Vishabhāntika 143
Visuddhi 57, 104, 158
Viśvakṣenasamhita 122
Viśvamurti 212
Visvanātha Nāyak 194, 199, 200
Viśvasārōttara 89
Vīṣhi Vīṭanka 190
Vrata 43
Vratins 105
Vriddhagiri mātmya 92
vrshadvaja 201
Vrshārūḍa 116
Vivādhā vidhi 113 vyākhyana 164
vyākhyānamudra 61
Vyāghra 31

Yagñā 11, 29
Yagnarūpini 203, 204
Yagnopavita 157, 176, 177
Yajamāna 121
Yakshamukyas 121
Yakshas 120, 134, 167
Yakshis 173
Yakshi cult 207
Yal 159
Yāli 6, 13, 25, 31
Yālimāṇḍapa 148, 149 yama 22, 106
Yāmala (s) 33, 34, 50, 57, 93
Yāmala sāstra 33, 93
Yāmala school 93
Yāmala tantras 29
Yamunā 43, 120, 121, 180
Yantra (s) 51, 52, 58, 94, 191, 208
Yantra raja 58
Yantravāda 93
Yantravāmi 94
Yāpparunkalam 20

Yapparunkalavṛitti 19
Yasoda 121
Yavanas 3
Yoga (s) 33, 73, 80, 84, 95, 104, 106, 111
Yogaja 118
Yogajāgama 111, 117
Yoga-Jñānamārga 57
yogamāyā 81, 82
Yoganishṭha 35
yogapattā 165
Yoga Śakti 56, 57
Yoga Yāmaja Sāstras 33
Yogesvara 186
Yogesvari 164, 167
Yogin 213
Yogini (s) 27, 33, 35, 51, 55, 126, 129, 186 yoginidra 119
Yoni 55, 110
Yōnīpīṭha 56, 187, 205, 206
Yoni Pīṭha Prathishṭha 109
Yugāndāditya 188

PLATES

1. A view of the lower rock cut cave Thiruchirappalli, dedicated to Siva and Vishnu. At the back wall are Ganesa, Subrahmanya, Brahma, Surya and Devi as Durga. That Durga is given equal importance with other deities may be seen from the representations wherein Durga appears at the end.

2. The Mahisha cave, to the north of sea-shore temple Mahallapuram showing Devi's lion attacking the monstrous Mahisha.

3. The monolithic temple of Durga, now called Draupadiratha, Mamallapuram, 8th cent. A.D.

4. The temple of Durga (Draupadiratha) with lion mount of the Devi shown in front.

5. The female guardians of the Devi (Jaya and Vijaya) shown in Draupadiratha, Mamallapuram

6. Devi as Paradevata standing on a lotus pedestal (not on Mahisha's head) inside the sanctum of Draupadiratha.

7. A hero offering his own head to the goddess.

8. The attendants of the goddess.

9. Durga shown in a niche at the back of the Draupadiratha, Mamallapuram. In this monolithic temple dedicated to Durga, all the three main niches around the garbhagriha carry the image of Durga. The simple hut shape of the temple may also be noted.

10. The saga in stone. The great scene of Mahishasuramardini, Mamallapuram.

11. The lion mount of the Devi in the seashore temple, complex, Mamallapuram.

12. Devi as Bhavani witnessing the dance of her master-Siva-Pallava fresco, 8th cent. Panamalai

13. Candika, the great Goddess, Mamallapuram, Pallava, 8th cent. A.D.

14. Somaskanda in the seashore temple-
Mamallapuram, Pallava, 8th cent. A.D.

15. Vina Vadini Devi found on the enclosure wall of the Kailasanatha temple of Kanchipuram. Pallava, 8th cent. A.D. The Syamaladandaka praises the love of music of the Devi as 'Manikka vinam upalalayantim.' The Navaratnamalika states "Vamanke nihita vinam".

16. Deva rshi sanghata stuyamana Atma vaibhava says Lalita sahasranama. This sculpture found on the enclosure wall of the Kailasanatha shows that the concept was fully developed in the Pallava times in the 7th-8th cent. A.D.

17 Durga in the cloistered cell south of the main shrine of Kailasanatha temple Kanchi.

18 Mahishasuradaman in cell south of main shrine Kailasanatha temple, Kanchi.

19. Durga and Mahayogesvari on the north wall of the central shrine, Kailasanatha temple, Kanchipuram.

21. Bhairava, Kailasanatha temple Kanchipuram.

20. In the centre is Tripurantanka to his left is Tripura to his right Tripura Bhairava, on the north wall of the Kailasanatha temple-Kanchipuram.

22. Saptamatas on the enclosure wall South of the main shrine, Kailasanatha temple, Kanchipuram. Brahmi, Mahesvari, Kaumari, Vaishnavi, Varahi, Indrani, and Camunda are seen in order.

23 Jyashtha devi on the north wall of the main shrine, Kailasanatha temple, Kanchi.

24. Vakdevi, Sundaravarada Perumal temple, Uttaramerur, Pallava-8th cent. A.D.

25. Durga in the Devakoshta of the Sive temple, Takkolam, of the age of Aparajita Pallava 9th cent. A.D.

26. Brahmi

27. Mahesvari

28. Kaumari

The seven mothers (Saptamatas) in the Virattanesvara temple of Thiruttani, of the age of Aparajita Pallava-9th cent. A.D.

29. Vaishnavi

30. Varahi

31. Indrani

33. Durga in Mangadu village near Madras, Pallava-8th cent. A.D.

32. Camunda

34. Eight-armed Durga in the Ranganatha temple, Thiruvarangam

35. Durga, four-armed, standing on a lotus by the side of her mount deer, Pallava, 9th cent. A.D.

36. Eight-armed Durga standing on the head of a Mahisha, Parangiyur, 9th cent.

37. A yogini found near fig. 36 Parangiyur.

39. Durga, Periyamarai Tiruchchi district, Pallava, 8th cent. A.D.

38. Durga, Vallam, Pallava, 8th cent. A.D.

40. Durga on the buffalo head. Standing by the side of her is her mount deer, now in the Madras Museum, 9th cent. A.D.

41. A paper impression of an eight-armed Durga standing with an inscription in 8th cent. Vatteluttu characters giving the name of the Goddess as Baghavati, Kurucculi on Tirthamalai, Dharmapuri district.

42. Another paper impression of Durga with an inscription in Tamil of 11th cent. A.D.

43. Durga and Vishnu in an excavated cave at Kunnakkudi, Pandya-8th cent. A.D.

44. Siva dancing on Muyalaka and Parvati standing by the side witnessing the dance. A part of the panel showing Saptamatas dancing is blocked by later walling, Thirupparankunram, Pandya, 8th cent. A.D.

45. The Goddess Nisumbasudani, set up at Thanjavur by Vijayalaya Chola, 9th cent. A.D.

46. Kali set up at Kilaiyur by a Paluvettarayar chieftain. Early Chola, 9th cent.

49. Durga stone, Kandiur, Thanjavur District, 9th cent. A.D.

47. Goddess Kali of improving beauty and elegance, Thiruvakkarai, of the age of Vijayalaya Chola, 9th cent. A.D.

48. A bronze image of Goddess Kali, Kilayur, Thanjavur district, of the age Vijayalaya Chola, 9th cent. A.D.

50. Durga, stone, Thyagaraya temple, Thiruvarur, Thanjavur, Early Chola, 9th cent. A.D.

51. Durga, stone, Thyagaraja temple, Thanjavur, Early Chola, 10th cent.

52. Durga, stone, Siva temple, Punjai, Chola, 10th cent. A.D.

53. Durga, stone, Amalisvaram temple, Thiruchidistrict, Chola, 10th cent. A.D.

54. Tripurasundari Durga, stone in the East Gopura, Chidambaram, Later Chola, 12th cent. A.D.

55. Bhadrakali in the West Gopura, Chidambaram, Later Chola, 12th cent. A.D.

56. Sarasvati in the Gopura, Chidambaram, Later Chola, 12th cent. A.D.

57. Goddess, Ganga in the East Gopura, Chidambaram, Later Chola, 12th cent. A.D.

58. Yamuna, stone, in the eastern Gopura, chidambaram, Later Chola, 12th cent.

59. Durga, Bronze, Chola, 11th cent. A.D. Tanjore Art Gallery.

60. Durga, Bronze, Dharmapuram mutt collection, Chola, 11th-12th cent. A.D.

61. Dancing girl carrying damaru and sula, found on the base of the prakara of Sivakami shrine, Chidambaram, Later Chola, 12th cent. A.D.

62-63. Dancers, Chidambaram temple, Later Chola, 12th cent.

64. Tillaikkali temple, built by Kopperunjing, 13th cent. A.D.

66. Amman shrine, built in the 13th cent., Darasuram.

65. Tillaivanam udaiya Paramesvari, Bronze, Chola, 11th cent. Tillaikali temple, Chidambaram.

67. Icca Sakti in the devakoshta of the Amman shrine Darasuram, 13th cent. A.D.

68. Jhana Sakti in the devakoshta of the Amman shrine, Darasuram.

69. The dvarapalikas, Amman shrine.

70. Jaya and Vijaya in Darasuram.

71. Ashtamata group-Thiruvaiyaru, Thanjavur Dist

72. Bhairava from Kalinga. Now in Chengamedu Gangai Konda Cholapuram.

73. Bhairava from Kalinga, Gangai Konda Cholapuram.

74. Bhairavi, Kalinga, now in Gangai Konda Cholapuram.

75. Durga, Nolamba, now in Gangai Konda Cholapuram.

76. Durga, Nolamba, now in the Siva temple at Thiruvadigai.

77. Devi enshrined in the sanctum holding akshamala and a flower in the upper arm.

78. Devi in the sanctum. holding flowers in both the arms

84. Siva as Gananatha heading Saptamatas.
Thanjavur-Early Chola, 9th cent. A.D.

79. Devi enshrined in the Amman temple,
Kalantai near Pollachi, Later Chola,
13th cent. A.D.

80. Devi doing tapas often called Tapas Kamakshi, stone, Later Chola, 12th cent. A.D.

81. Tapas-Kamakshi, Bronze, Mangadu temple, 18th cent. A.D.

82. A modern painting of Kanya Kumari the presiding deity of Kanya Kumari.

83. Somaskanda, Bronze, Pallava, Thiruvallangadu, 8th cent. A.D.

85. Guhambika, Bronze, Pallavanesvaram, 9th cent. A.D.

88. Urdhava Tandava Siva, Bronze, Thiruvalangadu, Chola, 10th cent.

89. Kali, Bronze, Chola, 11th cent., Thrivalangadu.

86. Tripura vijaya and Tripurasundari-Bronze-Konerirajapuram, Chola, 10th cent. A.D.

87. Tripurasundari. Bronze-Siva temple-Kodumudi-Kongunadu, 10th cent. A.D.

90. Kali, Bronze, Kolamali Amman temple, Mylapore, Chola, early 10th cent. A.D.

91. Kali standing with folded arms Melakkadambur Later Chola, 10th cent. A.D.

92. Kali-stone, Madurai, Nayak, 17th cent. A.D.

93. Kali-ivory-Srirangam Museum-Madurai Nayak 17th cent. A.D.

94. Kali-stone, Chola, Tiruvorriyur, 11th cent. A D.

95. Kali, Bronze gilded with gold from Mysore region.

96. Kali, Bronze, 17th cent. A.D.

97. Kali, Bronze, 17th cent.
Original from UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN

98. Parasakt, stone, in the Darasuram temple, Later Chola, 12th cent. A.D.

99. Maha Maya sakti-stone Siva temple-Darasuram, Later Chola-12th cent.

100. An attendant, Darasuram, Later Chola, 12th cent. A.D.

101. Sati stone, from Tenneri, depicting Brahma, Sivalinga, Uma, Subramanya, Narasimha, Srivatsa, the two arms, and two heros flanked by females.

102. Sati Panel. stone. Munnur, Braham, Linga, Parvati, Narasimha.

64 208AA 4309
05/97 BR1 02-013-01